"Why don't you want me to marry your daughter?"

"Maybe so, but you don't prove it by wanting to get married, young man."—Washington Herald.

To See the Back of Your Eye.

Behind the eye, what is called the retina, is lined with branching blood vessels, and a curious but perfectly simple experiment will enable you to see these. Place yourself in a dark room, opposite a dark colored wall; then light a candle and, holding it in your hand, move it up and down before your eyes, all the time looking not at the candle, but at the wall beyond. After a little practice you will see appear on the wall a great branching figure in black on a reddish surface. What you are looking at is the shadow of these blood vessels at the back of your own eye. Perhaps the most curious part of the whole thing is that the part of the eye which receives the impression of light must lie behind these blood vessels.—London Graphic.

Cured Her.

There is always a way out if one seeks in the proper direction. How the lady of the house put a stop to a telephone caller who annoyed her is told in the New York Sun: "A busy housewife on the west side had been called to the telephone every day for two weeks by some person who inquired if that was the meat market. It seemed impossible to straighten out the phone numbers. The housewife became angry. So the other day when called she admitted that it was the meat market and very pleasantly took a rush order for a dozen lamb chops. She hasn't been bothered since."

Fins Want Protection.

Helsingfors, Finland, June 3.—The most formidable blow of the many aimed at Finnish autonomy in the past few years, in the opinion of all classes here, was the bill brought up in the Russian duma today at St.

Petersburg. The bill requires that all Finns who resist Russian-made laws must be tried by a Russian court.

Introduced by the ministry of justice, the measure is designed to affect all offenses in which bureaucratic ingenuity can discover the slightest semblances of political motives, and includes murder, any attack on police or military, damage done to railways, mails, telegraphs or telephones, the manufacture or sale of bombs, and even any attempt to prevent the application of Russian laws to Finland. The purpose is admittedly to sweep as many Finns as possible into the wide net of Russian law and Russian court procedure. It is even worse than the laws which George III of England evoked against the colonies previous to the revolution.

An explanatory statement filed by the ministry with the bill is said to be full of gross misrepresentations, among the most flagrant of which is the assertion that the opposition to "Russification" comes from only a small section of the Finnish people. This is made in the face of the fact that the Finnish diet, which is one of the most representative and democratic parliaments in the world, is continually and emphatically protesting against various forms of Russian aggression.

Describing the bill today, the Donja, a leading Liberal organ, in a specially prepared article, said: "It means the stealing of Finland's political freedom. What remains, for instance of the freedoms of the press, under regulations which can regard any free word as criminal? The ministry of justice evidently desires to level Finland with Russia in the matter of lawlessness, step by step."

The fate of the measure which came up today lies with the Octobrists, who hold the balance of power in the duma. How they will vote when the measure reaches that stage, probably the latter part of this week, is as yet problematical.
