THE BREADFRUIT TREE.

Its Meat When Cooked Tastes Like Mashed Potatoes and Milk.

One of the gifts of the eastern tropics to the western is the breadfruit, which is now extensively planted in the West Indies. This can be done only by cuttings, as the cultivated variety develops no seeds. In the wild form the chestnutlike seeds are eaten, but the pulp is disregarded. The tree is of moderate height, but spreads a broad crown of large, ragged edged, glossy leaves, making an excellent shade.

The fruit, which is a compound of the massive clusters of blossoms, is about the size of a coconut and is husked in a rough rind. This, when baked in hot embers or in an oven, broken open and scooped out with a spoon, tastes like mashed potatoes and milk or like sweet bread, which it also resembles in appearance. It is a little fibrous toward the center, but elsewhere is quite smooth and "pudding." Sometimes a curry or stew is made of it, or gray "With sugar, milk, butter or treacle," Wallace wrote, "it is a delicious pudding, having a very slight, but pleasant and characteristic taste, which, like that of good bread and potatoes, one never gets tired of. It is also highly nutritious.

The genus (artocarpus) contains several species, one of which, the jack fruit, is also cultivated for eating. The timber of the tree is also useful, the bark can be prepared for a sort of cloth and the sap forms, when boiled with oil, a medicinal liquid very useful for making the seams of wooden pails, canoes and the like water tight.—Harper's Weekly.

EMERSON IN OLD AGE.

Even His Failing Memory Could Not Mar His Amiability.

In Dr. J. K. Hosmer's "The Last Leaf," there is a pathetic picture of Emerson in his old age, when his memory had failed while his other faculties remained strong: "I had as a fellow guest a man who had long been intimate with him and whom he was very glad to see. Talking after tea in the library, Emerson said: 'I want to tell you about a friend in Germany. His name I cannot remember, and he moved to and fro unasily in his effort to recall it. This friend with whom we have taken tea tonight, whose name also I cannot remember—here again came a distressed look at the failure of his faculty—I cannot remember his name either, but he can tell you of this German friend whose name I have also forgotten.

"It was a sorrow to see the brenting down of a great spirit and his agitation as he was conscious of his waning power. And yet, so far as I could see, it was only the memory that was going. The intellectual strength was still apparent, and the amiability of his spirit was perhaps even more manifest than in the years when he was in the full possession of himself.

"This came out in little things. He was overanxious at the table lest the hospitality should come short, troubled about the supply of butter and apple sauce, and soon after I saw him on his knees on the hearth taking care that the fire should catch the wood to abate the evening coolness that was gathering in the room."

Evolution of the Sideboard.

The dresser began service in the kitchen as a table, advancing until it was composed of a top and two shelves below, supported by four legs. It was then used not so much as a place for dressing the meats as a serving table, on which dishes were placed before being allotted to the members of the household. At a later period a portion of the dresser became inclosed, and after that an extra shelf, with sometimes a hood, was placed on it. It was not then an article of kitchen furniture, but stood in the hall or living room. As a result of the desire to reduce the quantity of furniture in the hall the credence and dresser were combined in one article, with a closet and shelf below and several shelves above, the whole surmounted by a canopy. Then it was like some of our sideboards, though it was not known by that name until the eighteenth century, when it assumed the long, low table form, with drawers and cupboards below. The name sideboard prior to this had, however, been applied to tables as early as the sixteenth century.

The Eye as a Camera.

The human eye is a perfect photographer's camera. The retina is the dry plate on which are focused all objects by means of the crystalline lens. The cavity behind this lens is the shutter. The eyelid is the drop shuttle. The draping of the optical darkroom is the only black membrane in the entire body. This miniature camera is self focusing, self loading and self developing and takes millions of pictures every day in colors and enlarged to life size. Charts have been prepared—marvelous charts—which go to show that the eye has 729 distinct expressions conveying as many distinct shades of meaning. The power of color perception is overwhelming. To perceive red the retina of the eye must receive three hundred and ninety-five million million vibrations in a second; for violet it must respond to seven hundred and ninety million million. In our waking moments our eyes are bombarded every minute by at least six hundred million million vibrations.—Chicago Tribune.

Ways of Carrying Money.

When mamma gives you a penny to buy a bit of candy she usually either sends you to her top bureau drawer to get her purse or takes it from a little box she keeps in which to drop her spare change. But, if your mamma were an immigrant—people who come to this country from foreign lands are called immigrants, you know—instead of your own dear mamma, she would carry her money in strange fashion. If she were a Swede or Norwegian she would carry it in a pocketbook so big that it contains enough leather to make a pair of shoes out of. The Italian immigrant prefers a small tin tube which he hangs about his neck by a small chain, and the Hungarian stuffs his money into his long boots—along with his knife and fork and spoon. Germans keep theirs in a belt strapped around their waist under the clothes and the French are partial to a small brass case about as large as the average pocketbook.—Detroit Free Press.

Lost to the Audience.

The composer Panell describes an experience he had at Queen's hall during one of the concerts, says the Paris correspondent of the London News.

Wishing to hear the orchestra to the best advantage, he ascended to the highest gallery of the building without saying anything to anybody and hid himself in a corner.

"The public listened beautifully," he writes, "and I was overcome with emotion. Seeing that they were determined to have me on the platform, I began to descend, but lost myself completely in a maze of passages. I wandered about for some time, opening doors, until it was too late to think of appearing. When I found my friends again they were very angry with me for what they considered my breach of good manners in not responding to the applause."

TRUTH.

Truthfulness is not so much a branch as a blossom of moral, manly strength. The weak, whether they will or not, must lie. As respects children, for the first five years they utter neither truth nor falsehood—they only speak. Their talk is thinking aloud, and, as one half of their thought is often an affirmative and the other a negative and, unlike us, both escape from them, they seem to lie, while they are only talking with themselves. Besides, at first they love to sport with their new art of speech and so talk nonsense merely to hear themselves. Often they do not understand your question and give an erroneous rather than a false reply. We may ask, besides, whether, when children seem to imagine and falsify, they are not often relating their remembered dreams, which necessarily blend in them with actual experience.—Jean Paul Richter
