GRANDE RONDE PEN PICTURE

COMMERCIAL CLUB SECRETARY IS AUTHOR.

Harriman Magazine Carries Descriptive Article of Valley.

(By C. M. Humphreys, Secretary La Grande Commercial club, in Harriman magazine.)

Let us enter the Grande Ronde valley practically along the same route that John Jacob Astor's party entered more than a hundred years ago. While they traveled under the most adverse circumstances, we can travel with a degree of comfort unsurpassed.

Coming from the east by the line of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation company, one gets the first view of this wonderful valley on rounding a point of the mountain in Pyle's canyon, between Telocaset and Union Junction, about fifteen miles east of La Grande. Near this point there is now located a passing track named in honor of C. T. Bacon, who is at present, and has been for many years, a physician for the O.-W. company at La Grande.

As the trains round the point, the traveler looks to the northward and beholds a scene that has but very few rivals in the whole world. I cannot attempt a description, but suffice it to say that when once seen will never be forgotten. Stretching away to the north for 35 miles lies the Grande Ronde valley, one of the most fertile spots in the northwest. Like a checkerboard, the farms extend as far as the eye can reach, and forest-covered hills come down and hem in the valley, which some one has truly said, "is a walled garden of Eden." Nearly two hundred feet below us and a mile away is the town of Union, a hustling little city of some 2000 people. It is an ideal home town, where giant old trees spread their arching branches across well-kept lawns, and Catherine creek pours an ice-cold stream from the everlasting snows of Eagle mountain, right through the heart of the town. At Union is located the Eastern Oregon branch of the state agricultural experiment station, an institution that furnishes valuable information to the fruit growers stock raisers and farmers, in fact, everyone that has to do with tilling the soil.

The Grand Ronde valley comprises some 400 square miles of territory and with an annual rainfall of about 21 inches, almost any product of the temperate zone can be successfully and profitably grown.

Coming on westward, we soon reach Union Junction, where a connection is made with the Central Railroad of Oregon, a small steam line that runs to the towns of Union and Cove. We have now reached the level of the valley and about three miles from Union Junction we come to Hot Lake a health resort of more than local fame. This institution has recently been taken under the control of the O.-W. R. & N. company and is attracting attention from all the northwest on account of the wonderful cures made by its healing waters. A large spring pours out of the earth at a temperature of 190 degrees F. and besides being used for bathing purposes, is utilized in the heating of the immense hotel and hospital maintained here. The overflow forms a lake several acres in extent.

Coming on westward, we soon reach La Grande, the metropolis of Eastern Oregon, both in population and business. She is the second payroll city in the state, the railroad, lumber and various other resources ably assisting in maintaining this record. The O.-W. R. & N. has its shops for the Eastern Division here; these give employment to several hundred men. The freight division for this territory is also located here and a large number of engine and train crews make the city their home. La Grande is also the junction point for the Joseph branch of the O.-W., which serves the northern part of Union county and the whole of Wallowa county, extending 84 miles, to Joseph, Ore.

Elgin, in Union county, and Wallowa, Lostine, Enterprise and Joseph in Wallowa county, are prosperous towns located along the line of railroad above referred to. Near Joseph named in honor of the Nez Perce chief, is Wallowa lake, a summer resort of no mean pretensions.

La Grande has a conservatively estimated population of 7000 and within a radius of three miles from the postoffice no less than 10,000 people have their homes. La Grande maintains a municipal water system, securing a bounteous supply of pure water from Beaver creek, 18 miles back in the mountains. The improvements which the city has made in the last few years are completely modern in every respect. Nearly ten miles of hard-surface pavement grace her streets; the sidewalks are of concrete; her sewer system has been pronounced one of the most sanitary in the west by the state board of health; a telegraph fire alarm system, paid fire department and an auto chemical truck are also included in her up to date civic equipment. Of course, there are the usual modern conveniences, such as telephone and electric light and power. Her school facilities are the best; the public schools boast of a very modern and complete high school building and four grade school buildings. The Catholic church also maintains the St. Francis academy, which institution annually sends out a large number of well equipped graduates.

In May of this year over $41,000 was subscribed in eight days for the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building, on which work will be commenced at an early date. Several new and large church buildings are being erected and a city library will be built this fall at a cost of $12,000. Enterprises of various kinds are being pushed forward with an energy that can only result in success.

The George Palmer Lumber company operates a large saw mill and lumber business at this place as does also the Grande Ronde Lumber company, whose mill is located three miles west of the city. The Masters-Ewoldt Lumber company is another concern that has its headquarters in the city and furnishes employment to many men. The Mt. Emily Timber company has also decided on La Grande for their permanent location and in the near future will commence the erection and operation of a large lumber plant. There are other enterprises, too numerous to mention in an article of this kind, which must necessarily be brief.

It has been said quite truthfully that "success is yours in the Grande Ronde valley" if you desire to make it so. We do not know what it is to boom, nor do we wish to find out. No inflation of land values has ever been known here and he who would work can make a success in the valley.

The Commercial club has an elegant home on the fifth floor of the new Foley building and visitors are always welcome. A number of railroad men already hold membership in the institution and there is room for many more.

City Heads Wrangle.

Salem, Ore., Aug. 5.—(Special)—"My shoulders are broad enough to take all the blows aimed at me by the city council," said Dr. B. L. Steeves, mayor of Salem, today. "They struck at Councilman Rigdon and thought they would hit me. I was missed entirely and only an innocent man was hurt."

Mayor Steeves and members of the council have been out of harmony for months. When he announced recently that he would take a vacation trip he appointed Councilman Rigdon Acting Mayor. Another councilman was elected by the board to preside over its meetings, after Mayor Steeves left the city. That angered Councilman Rigdon, who created a scene at the meeting by declaring he had been "struck from behind" and would leave the chamber, not to return until the council apologized to him. He left, and as soon as Mayor Steeves learned of the situation he returned post haste to the city.

Fire Threatens Wheat.

What threatened for a time to be one of the most disastrous stubble fire of the season occurred Friday afternoon on the Willis Reser farm south of town, when sparks from a traction engine ignited the dry strw in the field that had just been threshed. For three hours the crew fought the flames plowing large strips around the piles of wheat sacks, and finally the spread of the fire was checked, though not until it had burned within a few feet of one of the largest piles of thresher grain.—Walla Walla Union.
