DAY MARKET WEAK.
With Exception of Baker, Market is Generally Dragging.

Hay is a slow commodity in the Grande Ronde valley. It is reported that Baker hay is in demand and the prices going up, still local dealers have been advised from the state at large that the market is dull and dragging with prevailing prices the rule. All through the state the second crop was uniformly good and that may have had a tendency of pushing down any pending rise in prices that might have been indicated from the extensive damage done the first crops.

Baker, Aug. 18.—The Democrat says the hay prices are going up. This is the report from Portland and coast points and is shown by the fact that the buyers are now offering better prices for a poor quality than was offered for the best last year.

The reason is said to be a shortage. The heavy rains damaged many hundreds of tons and good hay is at a premium. Powder river valley farmers will realize handsomely on their product and they are considerably elated over their bright prospects.

EAGLE VALLEYS GO TO CANNERY

GROWERS THERE WONT DISTRIBUTE THEM.

Local Man Returns, Finding Crop Free and Men Independent.

Eagle Valley tomato growers who have the reputation in tomatoes that Hood River does in apples, are an independent lot since the big cannery there became an extensive concern and Eagle Valley tomatoes that may come to La Grande will have to be brought here by dealers other than Eagle Valley people. This is the discovery made by Oscar Crossen of this city who has just returned from a trip to the region with a wagon fitted up to bring out tomatoes. He found the crop still green and is informed that it will be fully three weeks before the community is sufficiently ripe and plentiful to really warrant an effort to distribute. The growers would much rather dispose of the crop to the cannery as it takes everything, than sell to dealers, and the Eagle Valley tomatoes will probably not become very cheap any more. A few are sent out to Baker now, but they are scattering in quantity and get hard usage so there will not be a chance lot in La Grande for some little time and even then in limited quantities unless local people pack them out.
