TRADE NAME UNIFORM ONE

"SKOOKUM" IS NAME APPLIED TO SHIPPER'S BEST.

List of Apples and Season in Which They Have Best Flavor.

Portland, Ore., Aug. 21.—(Special)—Leading fruit shipping organizations of the Pacific northwest made history the other day when they announced that their various communities would ship their best apples under one trade name. Perhaps if Teddy Roosevelt was asked to give his definition of the term "Skookum," the name selected, he would say "Bully." Whether Skookum is really bully or not will be answered this season when the best apples grown in the world will be shipped under that title. Skookum is of Chinook adaptation and really means something very good. It is something better than good; it is the highest to which the Chinook language can rise in expressing approval of quality. Seasons for eating apples have been officially named by these organizations. The apple that is best to eat in October and November would probably taste like a pumpkin in the spring months or an apple best for winter consumption would likely prove very unsatisfactory eating if consumed during the late summer or early fall months.

The varieties selected and the proper time for eating them have been officially named by Oregon-Washington apple growers as follows: October and November—Jonathan; brilliant red; a splendid family sort; juicy, rich and vinous. October, November and December—Grimes; golden yellow; an old time favorite; tender and spicy, with delightful aroma. November, December and January—Spitzenburg; bright red; the aristocrat of apples; crisp, juicy; deliciously rich and fragrant. November, December and January—Delicious; dark red; the latest favorite; sweet, mildly touched with acid; fine and melting. December, January and February—Stayman; rich red; an improved Winesap; very tender with rich subacid. January, February and March—Rome Beauty; red striped; the champion baker; sprightly and pleasant. February, March and April—Yellow Newtown; greenish yellow; the best late apple; fine flesh with refreshing high flavor. February, March and April—Winesap; intensely rich red; very inviting.
