LAUNDERING SUMMER COWNS

Timely Hints For Home Cleaning
That Will Prolong the Life and Attractiveness of the Garments.

THE laundering of the dainty summer gown is a matter that requires care and skill. Never before have frocks been so fragile, and never has their reappearance from the tub been the occasion of so many disappointments.

The use of colored embroidery on white frocks makes it necessary to exercise special care in washing them. The elaborate embroideries and laces adopted in their embellishment also increase the difficulties.

How to Wash Veils.

Some suggestions for handling the fashionable fabrics are given here.

Plain voile and crepe frocks should be washed in water comfortably hot to the hand, with enough dissolved soap added to form a lather. To make dissolved soap grate a piece of pale yellow soap, or shred it finely with a knife and add boiling water, stirring until it is dissolved. Squeeze and press the frock in the soapy water until clean, rinse in warm water and in cold to clear the material; then dip it in borax water in the proportions of one tablespoonful to two quarts of water. Run through a wringer or mangle or squeeze tightly in a cloth, and iron at once on the wrong side to avoid a gloss.

When ironing the frock iron any little pieces of lace, insertion, etc., the sleeves, then the body. If a sleeve board is available it is a great saving of time when doing the tops of the sleeves and intricate parts of the bodice. After the bodice is finished slip the frock over a skirt board and iron the skirt, pressing very firmly. With the fashionable frocks it is quite a simple matter to iron them folded in half on the ironing table, being careful to avoid a crease down the skirt.

Striped or Spotted Fabrics.

Black and white striped or spotted voiles need very special care to prevent the black from running into the white. Steep in cold salted water (one tablespoonful to one quart), then wash and rinse as explained above. Finally dip in cold salted water.

For black and white, instead of using borax use gum water, taking three teaspoonfuls of the solution to one pint of cold water. Quickly squeeze the frock out of this and lay it on a cloth, folding it so that a fold of the cloth comes between each of the folds of voile. Then, if the black runs during the wringing, it stains the cloth instead of the material. Iron on the wrong side, so that the softened dye does no harm. Finish ironing the parts difficult to get at on the right side.

The Useful Gum Water.

For gum water take two ounces of white gum arabic crystals and half a pint of warm water. Wash the crystals in cold water, place them in a saucepan with the warm water, put over gentle heat, stir occasionally until dissolved, strain through muslin, bottle, cork and use as required.

Voiles with raised spots or stripes should be ironed entirely on the wrong side and on a very soft surface to make the raised parts stand out well. Two folds of felt under the ironing sheet are advisable. Baby frocks--viz., tiny frocks--are invaluable for the small parts difficult to iron with a large one.

The beautiful crepe voile embroidered frocks worked in satin stitch need very heavy pressure on the wrong side to give them a good "finish." It is well to use a heavy iron and a soft surface for ironing on. Either gum water or borax water is suitable for white or cream, but if trimmed with colored embroidery or needlework avoid the use
