Waking From Sleep.

That is the test of robust health—the manner in which you rise from your bed in the morning. While a man is in perfect health he awakens naturally if his body has been sufficiently refreshed by his rest. The hours of repose are a matter of habit and temperament. In many cases, mental activity is at its height in those first minutes of waking. Poets and authors have conceived brilliant ideas in those moments of perfect physical repose. The brain alert and the organs and tissues toned up after their rest. Reluctance to leave the bed is not a good sign—a really healthy man is too full of vigor to lie still. Quality, not quantity, is the ruling factor in sleep. The broken nightmare or fitful slumber is not rest, for at such times neither brain nor body is in repose. Four hours of sleep with all feeling or thought in oblivion are worth more than nine hours of restlessness.

Knew Him as Well.

A certain cantankerous old gentleman not long ago advertised for a coachman, who was required, among other qualifications, to possess an intimate acquaintance with the neighborhood. But to his great surprise he received not a single application for the vacant post.

"I cannot understand it at all," he said, as during a chat one day with an old ostler at the local livery stables he had mentioned the fact. "Let me see," said the latter, as a gleam of intelligence flitted across his face. "Ye had advertised, I believe, for one as 'must be well acquainted with the neighborhood, didn't ye?" "I did," replied the old gentleman shortly. "I want some one who knows his way about." "Ab, that explains it," was the answer. "Ye see, they who knows the neighborhood well knows ye too!"—Exchange.
