MASTER PRODUCTION OF GREAT PLAY TONIGHT

Gladiators Saluting Nero in "Qua Vadis" the Famous Film at The Arcade Tonight.

For the massing of big incidents, the display of the big world making events, for an insight into the history of one of the most historic nations of the world no picture has heretofore approached in effectiveness the great drama "Quo Vadis." The words mean in English, "where are you going," and were intended by the writer of the book Henryk Sienkiewicz, for the present day generations in view of the appalling gait at which civilization is traveling. Rome was much like our nation, starting first with a monarchical form of government, then a republican and later, by an imperialistic. Through her immense wealth she became notoriously corrupt. Great banquets at which the emperor and other notables of the nation vied with each other in drinking and lewdness, contrasted with the sturdy growth of Christianity and the pure lives of some of its adherents, make this period of Rome one of the most interesting in history. The author sets these various pictures side by side in order to give the readers an idea from which he might draw his own conclusions. The great temples and the palace-like structures for the scenery, the real amphitheatre in which many a saintly young man or woman was
