Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Smith, managers of the barnyard circus which played at the Arcade for a number of nights, left this morning for the east. Mrs. Smith said the public could hardly appreciate the difficulty involved in trying to make an ordinary pig perform theatrical stunts, particularly when none of its ancestors had contributed to its geneology any hereditary instincts or inclinations to be any thing other than just pork and bacon. Patrons of the Arcade will agree that with a few urgings the pigs belong to the intellectual branches of the pig dynasty, and that they may some day get away from the controlling fashion of just being fat. Some day hoble skirts and such like maybe.
