CAP. WILLIAM'S DICTATIONS CLARIFY HISTORY

When the pioneers of Union county meet at Imbler a week from today to participate in the annual convention of the Union pioneer association, they will have opportunity to see a valued historical document. It is a scrap book in which the late Captain Williams dictated several interesting statements of Indian wars in which he participated. Captain Williams, who died last winter near Summerville, was the last survivor of the early Indian wars—the last surviving officer at least. Furthermore few people have ever known his birthplace, or his age until this particular scrap book came to light. "Uncle" William Currey, of Imbler, has the book in his possession and he values it highly for it contains Mr. Williams' own version of several disputed historical facts about the wars. Mr. Williams, it develops, dictated the statement about two years ago. Excerpts from the statement say:

"The war of 1855 and 1856 occurred in the Columbia River basin west of the Cascade mountains in Washington territory. Captains Williams and Golf were lying over at the Umatilla Crossing known as the Henriette celebrating the fourth of July, 1856. The former was captain of Company

K of the second regiment of Washington territory volunteers; the latter of company N of the same regiment.

Powder River Battle Scene.
"On the fourth day of July, 1856, an expressman came to us from Captain Slater for re-inforcements. Captain Slater was holding his little army at the head of the North Powder river at the time. Captain Golf with a small detachment of men went to his assistance.

Shifts to Mt. Emily.
"The war party moved from the head of the North Powder river to the foot of Mount Emily. Colonel Shaw with two hundred volunteers attacked the war party in their post. The war party not being able to withstand this attack, retreated to the hills in great disorder.

"Captain Williams, being day officer, was ordered by Colonel Shaw to hold the pack train until further orders. While holding the train Captain Williams had occasion to capture about 20 head of pack horses and also six beef cattle. He had packs examined at once and found forty pounds of gunpowder, which he ordered thrown in the grass.

"An Indian woman was seen lying dead in the path with a buffalo skin by her side, which Captain Williams ordered thrown over the dead body. Two women were likewise found in the tall grass. These he ordered to mount and put them in charge of a sergeant.

"Seeing an Indian chief coming out of the underbrush and advancing about thirty yards on the plain, Captain Williams and his men rode out and opened fire on him at a hundred yards distance. The Indian chief had reached safety in the underbrush and Captain Williams ordered his men to march on.

"The chief returned presently with about 60 warriors, when the real fighting began. After the first round he ordered his men to turn the captured horses and cattle loose on the plains so as not to be encumbered with their care. Captain Williams and his men fought on the defense for about five miles from Horseshoe lake, where the heaviest fighting took place. Here he ordered his men to make a fortification out of the wagons and the pack train. The warring Indians retreated into the brush and after waiting for their return half an hour we marched up the river about two miles to the crossing. We were encamped and waited for the Colonel to return. He reported that

Maxwell with his 16 boys had strayed. Captain Williams and Captain Golf with a small detachment of men started on a search. His detachment having been defeated by the Indians he returned to headquarters, not knowing the whereabouts of Captain Golf or of Captain Williams.

Williams Near La Grande.
"The governor sent Maxwell to ascertain the whereabouts of Captain Williams. He reached their camp on the third or fourth evening of the search. They had camped at a site just about the present site of La Grande. From here they took up their march for Walla Walla. When they arrived at headquarters the governor ordered Captain Williams to take his boys and meet the pack train, which was bringing up quartermaster supplies from The Dalles. Lieutenant Gates asked that he might go and Captain Williams sent him with a detachment of thirty men. They met the train where the city of Pendleton now stands. Here they came in contact with the Indians, who surrounded them and took their provisions, about eight miles south of Walla Walla. None of the men were killed in this skirmish, but two men were wounded, one being shot through the finger, the other through the thigh.

In October, 1856 the warlike Indians made an attack on headquarters at Walla Walla, but were finally repulsed with but a small loss on the defensive side. Thus ended the War of 1855 and 1856.

Captain James Williams was born in Glasgow, Barren county Kentucky, in the year 1823, Jan. 7th. He first served in company D First Oregon regiment.
