FEET AND FLOORS.

How the Body May Be Robbed of its Heat and Vitality.

A cold floor is one that conducts heat away from the body, not necessarily one that is cold in itself. A wooden floor and a stone floor exposed to the cold will in themselves have no great difference in temperature. But one may walk barefooted over a wooden floor with comparative comfort, no matter how cold the weather, while a stone floor will seem to freeze the feet.

On the other hand, in a warm room the stone floor will be warmer than the wooden floor, for it will take up the heat. Thus the heat from a radiator standing on a stone or tile floor will make it warm for several feet in every direction, but it will affect the wooden floor only very slightly. A cold floor, therefore, is not a floor which sends cold into the body through the feet, but one which takes away the body heat, leaving it cold.

Life consists in keeping up the body heat. It is in order to get sufficient body heat that we eat and to retain it that we wear clothes. Were there no wind and if we moved hardly at all clothes would not be necessary, because the heat of the body would keep a layer of heated air about us all the time. But the wind and our natural movements constantly disperse this layer of heated air, and in consequence we wear clothes to keep this layer in.

In summer coolness is secured by loose clothing, which lets the wind blow away the heated air; in spring and fall more closely woven garments keep the heated air near. In very cold weather furs are used, because the skin and the fur afford a powerful resistance to the escape of body heated air. As long as the body heat is kept up illness is likely to be a long time away.

Cold floors rob us of body heat—they steal away our vitality. The slow sapping of vitality that comes from standing on cold floors is fearfully weakening to the system. No matter how old or ragged a rug or carpet, no matter how thin a cork or fiber mat, it will lengthen your life and save you from numberless discomforts which cold floors cause.—New York Journal.

THE CURIOUS LUSHEIS.

An Eastern People Who Are Afraid to Speak Their Own Names.

In his book, "The Lushel Kuki Clan," Lieutenant Colonel J. Shakespear tells of a curious trait of the Kushels, a Bengal frontier race. They have a strong and general dislike to speaking their own names. The author tells of his experience with this strange people and accounts for that fear in the following manner:

When we first occupied the hills a man would not tell us his name. If asked he would refer us to some one else and say, "You tell him." The following explanation of their habit was given by a Lushel:

"Lushels are shy of saying the name of their father and their mother and their own name. Because it is their own name they are shy of saying it. Some people are shy because their names are bad. Their parents' names—because they are their parents they never call them by their names; therefore they are shy of saying them. Their own names also they never say. Just for that reason they are shy of saying them. The names of their brothers and friends they are always saying; therefore they are not shy of saying them."

Long ago another explanation was given. When a man kills another he calls out his own name, "I, Lal-manga, have killed you!" so that the spirit of the dying man may know whose slave he will be in "Mithi-Khua," the dead man's village. Accordingly, it was suggested, it was unlucky for a person to speak his name on a less important occasion.

BRILLIANTS.

Hear'n forming each on other to depend, A master or a servant or a friend. Bids each on other for assistance call Till one man's weakness grows the strength of all. —Pope.

There's silence in the harvest field, And blackness in the mountain glen, And cloud that will not pass away From the hilltops for many a day, And stillness from the homes of men. —Mary Howitt.

APHORISMS ON LOVE.

Love is like fire. Wounds of fire are hard to bear; harder still are those of love.—Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen.

Love! Who lightest on wealth, who maketh the couch in the soft cheeks of the youthful damsel and romnest beyond the sea and mid the rural cots, thee shall neither any of the immortals escape, nor men, the creatures of a day.—Buckley.
