MERCHANTS OFF FOR THE FOURTH

BUSINESS MEN WILL BE GOOD FELLOWS.

Saturday Buyers Must Transfer Purchases to Friday Night.

So as not to take by surprise the good housewife, the hotel keeper or any who depend on them for daily necessities, the merchants of La Grande have issued a statement to the effect that they will be closed on the fourth and they now follow it up with a statement to the effect that they will keep open house on Friday evening, July third, so as to accommodate those who have to do their shopping after hours. This will give the people ample time to prepare for Saturday and Sunday dinners.

The following list will close shop: The Golden Rule Co., Geibel's Department store, The People's store, N. K. West & Co., Andrews Bros., United Store, F. L. Lilly, L. J. French, French & Scranton, E. E. Kirtley, Geo. Anderson Co., Thee Hub, J. H.

WHY SUFFER WITH EPILEPSY FITS OR FALLING SICKNESS?

Read the following words of praise from grateful patrons and let us mail you scores of other endorsements. Let us prove to you that what they say of our treatment is true and entitled to your support and belief.

Portsville, Calif., March 14, 1913.

Dear Sir:— With great pleasure I am writing these lines to tell you that my boy who had epilepsy is cured. You will rejoice with me I know. The last spell he had was in June, 1912. He is doing fine in his studies, gaining in flesh and strength. Thank God for the wonderful cure of my boy. To tell the truth, I had but little faith in it when I started, but now I can just see what we people are—at times give up so easy in believing. I wish you would advertise your medicine in one or two of our church papers and refer people to me. I shall spread the news as far and wide as I can. Tell them to write to me for proof. No pen can describe my joy. He had them eight years and three to four a day. Praise God for his goodness to us and to give men great knowledge to find relief for poor sufferers.

Truly yours,
MRS. IDA STRUM.

BULL HAS NO CHANCE SAYS FUNSTON.

(By WILLIAM G. SHEPHERD.)
Vera Cruz, Mex., June 20.—(By mail to New York.)—"The bull does not get a fair chance," was the reason which General Funston gave for prohibiting bull fighting in Vera Cruz. It's a thoroughly good American reason. Here's an instance of how Americans here agree with the fair fighting little brigadier from Kansas:

As soon as bull fighting ceased a quick-brained, money-mad little Spaniard, who runs a theatre in a big frame building here dug up a moving picture film which had been taken at the height of the season in the great bull ring at Madrid. Five of the greatest bull fighters in the world—Pastor and Gaona, Mexican idols, included—were shown killing one bull each. Each bull in turn was shown on the screen in the act of killing six or eight splendid horses. The many Americans in the audience, on the first night, were sickened with disgust. The Spanish and Mexican trick of permitting a bull to toss a heavy horse about on its horns, until it is tired out, was soon spotted by the American beholders. They saw that each "valiant" matador, just before the final thrust, was facing not a wild ferocious bull but a pitifully exhausted and weak wreck that could harm no one. They realized in full, what Funston meant when he said, "The bull hasn't a chance."

The film showed the sixth bull entering the ring, to be faced by the great Spanish fighter Fuentes. And, all of a sudden, the picture stopped several printed lines were thrown on the screen, explaining that the next view would show how Fuentes had been terribly injured by the bull. An odd murmur ran through the audience. It was pay night and many soldiers were in the crowd. The picture was resumed. The bull approached the matador; the matador slipped; and the bull caught him, in the stomach with his horns; it ran about the ring, shaking the "hero" like a rag. Someone in the rear clapped. Someone near him joined him. In a minute the clapping was general. There were fifty cheers. The picture whirled along; Fuentes was shown being flung through the air, a senseless heap; a dozen "valiant" bull fighters were shown rushing for the fence with the bull after them, like a summer girl fleeing from a cow. The cheering became wild. Suddenly a soldier grabbed a Mexican by the nap of the neck, stood him on his feet and then knocked him down. "The son of a gun was hissing the bull," he explained to a comrade as the lights went on.

Hugs Sell Store.

Elgin, July 1.—After a successful business career in Elgin that extends over a period of more than 15 years, leading from a small picture gallery to one of the best general stores in the county, Hug Brothers have retired and will from now on devote their time to their interest outside of merchandising.

Eugene was the first in business here and conducted a photograph gallery on Main Street where the building now stands that was recently used as a residence by H. W. Buell. The building used for the gallery is the same one that is now occupied by the Tenderfoot Saloon. At its former location there is a large box elder and this is one of several that was set out by the Hugs at the time that they were located there.

The new purchasers of the Hug store are Portland people, a Mr. Somers and Mr. Fleischman. They are now invoicing, and completing the arrangements for the taking over of the active management of the business. The Hugs took a small store in Portland as part payment in the deal, and Henry Hug will leave shortly after the 1st of July to take charge of it. He does not expect to remain in Portland, permanently, but will close out the business and return to Elgin as soon as he can do so.

LIFE OF A SIBERIAN EXILE.

One Political Offender Who Lives in Comparative Luxury.

How a political exile lives in Siberia is shown in M. B. Price's book "Siberia." Mr. Price encountered this exile at Miusinsk. He and his family lived in a large house, and his actual punishment seems to consist of a certain social ostracism consequent upon banishment from the great centers of Russian life.

"When I went to call upon him he came to the door himself and, showing me in through a room where he and his wife had been having their evening meal, ushered me into a room beyond. I noticed his calm, philosophical face was that of a man who had evidently endured mental strain with stoical fortitude, but his wife, more nervous than he, showed signs of former anxiety. It seemed strange indeed that I should be sitting in company with two members of high Russian society, now ostracized by exile to Siberia, and stranger still to partake of their intelligent conversation on topics of human interest.

"First of all I was interested to know what sort of restrictions were placed upon the exile's liberty. I found that he was not allowed to leave the district in which he resided and that every week he had to sign his name in a book kept at the house of the chief 'nachalnik.' With that exception his life was free. He had money, and he could live as he liked and go where he wished within that district, but he was continually watched by spies, who dogged his footsteps wherever he went.

"He related to me how he had acquired gold concessions on the Mongolian frontier and was hoping to find capital to float a syndicate for working them next year. This was not at all my idea of the life of a Siberian exile. Instead of being made to work himself in the galleries of the gold mines till death released him from his chains, the exile now floats mining syndicates."

INFINITUDE OF SUNS.

Those We Know Are as Nothing to Those Beyond Our Ken.

The photographs of 25,876 standard plates show the points, or images, of 100,000,000 suns. These have not been actually counted, but plates secured by exposure in telecameras to typical regions of the sky have, and the entire number has been subjected to the calculus of probabilities, resulting in the general number of 100,000,000 colossal suns.

These have been weighed—that is, their combined force of gravitational attraction has been computed. This led to one of the most overwhelming discoveries—namely, this entire pull of attractions of the quantity of matter in 100,000,000 suns as massive as our own sun could not even begin to impart the high specific speeds of several well known "runaway" suns. These are dashing through what has been named space with velocities so much greater than all other suns that they are a class by themselves.

Our sun contains 333,426 times more matter than is in the earth, and this multiplied by 100,000,000 reveals the quantity of matter known to exist, beyond all human imagination. But this immense mass may almost be ignored as a mere fraction in comparison with the gigantic quantity necessary to impart a velocity of from 150 to 200 miles per second to these suns flying athwart the sidereal universe.

Let the number of these suns or dark bodies run up to trillions or octillions, then the entire quantity of matter in all of them would be less than the weight of one grain of sand if compared to an infinite quantity of matter. —Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

How Not to Drown.

A person who has not learned to swim, who falls into water, really drowns himself because he struggles to climb out. Should he keep cool and immerse his body, excepting his nostrils, he could float until help reached him. No one drowns with his nostrils above the surface and his mouth closed. By many experiments it was ascertained years ago that a fish—not a mammal—will live ten or twelve days out of the water if its gills are kept thoroughly wetted, and a man or woman with nostrils above the surface will not drown.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Held Him to the Rules.

An old soldier on leaving the army wrote to his colonel in the following terms: "Sir—After what I've suffered, tell the army to go to blazes." Imagine his astonishment on receiving a reply in the usual official manner: "Sir—Any suggestions or inquiries as to movements of troops must be entered on army form 123 X. Y. Z., a copy of which I am inclosing. Yours, etc."—London Telegraph.

Roundabout, but Clear.

Irate Parent—No, siree. You can't have her. I won't have a son-in-law who has no more brains than to want to marry a girl with no more sense than my daughter has shown in allowing you to think you could have her.—Life.

A Poor Showing.

"How's your boy getting on in college?" "Not very well. They batted him out of the box in the third inning the other day."—Detroit Free Press.

CHURCH GROWS WITH RAPIDITY

DELEGATE TO WORLD'S SESSION SPEAKS HERE.

Local Christian Scientists Hear Glowing Reports of Growth.

That Christian Scientists as a church organization have built more churches and had more additions to membership in the past year than in any previous year was the message brought to La Grande Christian Scientists last evening by Paul Seeley, of Portland, who, as the publication committee of that church, in Oregon, was returning from Boston where he attended the world's business session in The First Church of Christ Scientists. Mr. Seeley was met at the train last evening by local church people and at the hall later he gave a two hour lecture on the result of the session at which representatives were present from all parts of the world.

Its municipal problems were just as much a problem then as now, and it is possible that at times the commission form of government was contemplated. Jos. Palmer, Mox Bloch, and John Baker, who figured in the city's politics of those days, are still residents of La Grande. J. W. Gray is now United States Commissioner, located at Halfway, Oregon. The whereabouts of Henry W. Dwight, formerly register of the United States land office, is not generally known. W. J. Snodgrass and P. A. Mahaffey, who were very prominent in the upbuilding of Union county and La Grande, have been dead several years. It is thought these old papers might recall some interesting incidents to the minds of old settlers. They may be seen at the local land office.
