Blue Mountain Grange Holds Christmas Number

By MRS. E. C. GOLDEN
(Secretary Blue Mountain Grange)
The last meeting of Blue Mountain Grange was a day of surprises all around. First Miss Eleanor Williamson, who has been attending school at Walla Walla, was with us. As Section No. 2 served dinner a lovely Christmas tree loaded with apples was brought in and candles lighted by Brother George Grout. After a sumptuous dinner others took charge of meeting. Song by members. Reading, "He is Come," by Mrs. A. P. Davis. Reading, "The Holy Night," Mrs. Mabel Anson. Christmas in Germany, which is celebrated Dec. 6th, their manner of secret giving, written by Mrs. Clara H. Waldo. Past Lecturer of Oregon State Grange, who has traveled extensively in Europe, read by Mrs. C. D. Huffman. Recitation, "The Night Before Christmas," Zoe Golden. The young people surprised the members with a song and dialog, entitled "The Grouch Family." The characters were Joseph, Stella, and Cecil Anson, Arthur and Zoe Golden, Sarah Williamson and Etha Huffman. "The First Christmas," Mrs. N. H. Anson. "Women in Professions," Mrs. George Grout. "Grange Echoes," Arthur Golden, editor. Roll Call. "What I First Remember About Christmas when a Child," "Christmas in Sweden on the Farm," told by Mrs. J. A. Holman, to which everyone gave attention and was very interesting.

The next Pomona Grange will be held with Riverside Grange, Dec. 26th.

 SMALL STREAM REAL PEST *****

George Washington crossing the Delaware had nothing at all on the residents of "Old Town" who are wading around in water and slush up to their ankles—some say knees—in order to get to their homes after a trip down town, or to get down town from their homes—whichever way you want to put it.

And, as the European war which has been the "fall cause" of everything that has happened for the past three months, so this predicament of the old town residents can be truthfully laid to the recent freeze. A little ravine which crosses Fourth street at H avenue was left out at night—as usual—when the cold weather hit here, and the pure mountain water resented the icy touch of winter's hand promptly and very properly froze up. This happened several days ago and each succeeding night and day has been adding to the difficulties, freezing at night, thawing a little the next day and then fling up a little more ice at night again until the little stream has gotten its back up proper and spread itself all over the pavement and the prairie adjacent to Fourth and H. This morning the water had worked down as far as Sixth and I avenue, three blocks from the original freeze and there is no telling just where it will end unless the blockade of the stream progress is overcome.

Residents of that particular locality do not take exactly kindly to the caperings of the innocent little stream, contending that it is perfectly comfortable to sit by a cozy fire and read about the flooding of Belgium for the purpose of keeping out the invaders, but it is altogether a different proposition in real life, and then besides we have no invaders to flood out. About the only enjoyment that is to be gleaned out of the unpleasant situation is found by the little boy who thinks that it is great sport to skate all over the city, including the neighbor's front yard.

THE JUNGLE IS COMING

WILL BE SHOWN TONIGHT AND TOMORROW

Upton Sinclair's Wonderful Book Told in Picture Form

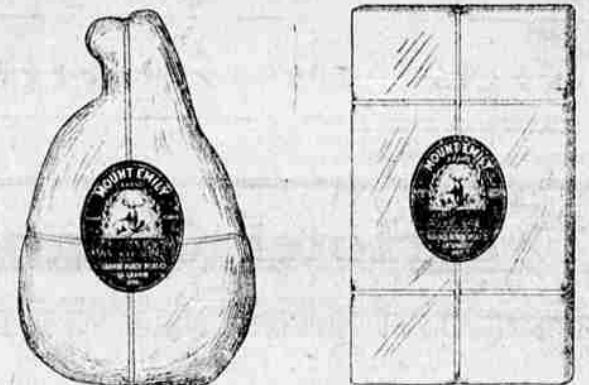

Upton Sinclair's wonderful book, "The Jungle," will be brought to La Grande tonight and tomorrow night. It will be shown at the Arcade and doubtless standing room will be at a premium during these two nights. The admission is 15 cents lower floor and 10 cents in the balcony. Children at the usual prices. This story is widely read but a hasty review of the famous stock yards story, is not amiss. In a peasant village of far away Lithuania lives old Antanas with his wife, his step-daughter Ona, and two young children, Kotrina and Stanislovas. Jurgis Ruckus, of a neighboring village, is betrothed to the beautiful Ona.

Jokubas Szedvilas, an old friend of Antanas, who some years earlier has come to America in search of fortune, writes in glowing terms to Antanas, telling of the great opportunities which the country offers and bidding him to come to it. Antanas becoming enthused, decides to migrate with his family. Jurgis is persuaded to go with them, as is Marija Berezyska, a cousin of Ona's. Arriving in America, the party goes to Chicago to meet Jokubas. Among Jokubas' patrons is Connor, the foreman of the Durham packing house, and exercising his small influence, Jokubas secures employment through Connor for Jurgis, Ona, little Stanislovas and old Antanas. Marija secures employment as a maid in the household of John Durham, the King of Packingtown, and with each hand bringing its earnings to the humble household, soon happiness surrounds the hopeful people. With this successful progression, there comes the eventful marriage of Ona and Jurgis, bringing its happiness to all save Marija, who harboring a secret love for Jurgis, weeps in solitude as she watches her Jurgis being taken away from her by another. Durham, the packing house magnate, angered by the extravagance of his wife and son Freddy, orders a wage reduction of 20 per cent in his plant. Freddy Durham, the wild young son of Durham, violates the trust of Marija, and as she demands money from him for her starving family, is overheard by Mrs. Durham, and promptly ordered from the house. Covering with shame, she finds her way to the barren attic room which now houses her family and there meets Jurgis, who questions her and secures an admission of her guilt. She is ordered from this home by Jurgis, and homeless she turns to the streets. She meets with a chance acquaintance who points an easier way to her, and with the sole desire of some way aiding her starving kinsfolk, Marija's road to disgrace is begun. How a socialist meeting leads to recovery of lost friends and return to normal habits by the unfortunate girl, is told just the way Captain Upton Sinclair tells it. Adv. 2t.
