

If You Are a Millionaire You Need Not Read These Words

Of Course, if you insist on reading this advertisement, Mr. Millionaire, we will have to be good natured about it, and let you do it. The fact is, we don't see how we can prevent you from reading it, if you feel that you must. The publishers of this newspaper are absurdly democratic chaps; they insist that everybody shall have an even chance to read anything we print here.

But frankly, we did not intend this advertisement for you. No offense meant, Old Top, but that is the plain truth. The point is, if you are burdened with a million dollars, or more, of this world's goods, the chances are you are already wearing made to measure clothes, as good as Royal Tailored to Order clothes. Not any better, you understand—for better clothes cannot be obtained at any price.

But you are getting made to measure clothes that are practically, or almost, as good as Royal clothes, by going to a high class local tailor and paying him twice the price of Royal clothes.

All this is exactly as it should be. We should be grieved indeed, if we should change your course of action. You owe it to American business to keep your money in circulation. If we influenced you to come here and buy your clothes, that would mean that you would save $15 to $30 on every suit—and that would tie up more of your wealth, and leave it idle. Besides, the high priced local tailor is a conscientious, good fellow; he needs the money. You can afford to give it to him. Why, then, shouldn't you do it, even though Royal Service, because of its enormous output, can give you the same clothes at half the price? We won't exactly refuse your business, if you insist on bringing it here. But still, we'd rather you'd keep on giving it to the local tailor. We want him kept alive. We want his competition, so that we can show other folks, by comparison, what wonderful merchant tailoring Royal Service offers at $16, $17, $20, $25, $30, and $35.
