CHAPTER XXIX.

Ruth to the Rescue.

In honor of their engagement Sir Donald Faversham gently insisted that Ruth Gallon attend a ball which was to be given by the British officers.

Though she said nothing to any one else about her feelings, she really could not refrain from accusing herself of disloyalty to John Dorr.

He was out in the hills risking his life to regain her fortune. Could she dance and take pleasure with a cheerful heart when she did not know whether he was living or dead?

However, she went and received the formal congratulations of a great many natty officers and the informal complaints of certain young Americans, who vowed that she was unpatriotic in choosing an English husband, and danced with Sir Donald and his friends and smiled and blushed at the compliments and frowned laughingly on the flirts and generally conducted herself as a happy bride to be should.

Faversham was delighted and told her so in many ways. And long after midnight, when Mrs. Reynolds was preparing to go home, he took Ruth out under the shadows of the garden trees and would have kissed her.

"Don't!" she said simply. "What is the matter, darling?" he asked tenderly.

She stared out into the darkness, and he saw the pallor of her face. "I am sure something has happened to John."

Faversham frowned. It was too bad that this man should always come between him and his betrothed. But his voice was very gentle as he answered: "That is out of the question. Achmet is very faithful, and if anything had happened I should know of it."

Ruth shook her head and insisted that she was sure. The baronet laughed at her, but she was not to be put off.

"I know John is in trouble," she said determinedly. "If you won't help me I'll go myself!"

Sir Donald argued as strongly as he could and in vain. "I'm perfectly sure that John Dorr is in trouble," she repeated. "He's all alone up there among those awful natives and—"

"Achmet is with him," interposed Faversham. —"and some one must go right away and help him," Ruth went on.

"You poor girl!" murmured Mrs. Reynolds. "I know how you feel, but you must get some rest. We'll talk it over later in the morning."

She drew Ruth away toward her room, with a backward glance of whimsical comfort for the baronet. Faversham watched them go, stood doubtful for a moment, shook his head and departed.

The consul's wife found Ruth too stubborn to handle by herself, for she insisted that, as no one else would go, she would set out herself, and to emphasize her assertion began to change from her ball gown into a riding habit.

The consul came out in dressing gown and slippers when Ruth, fully clad, emerged from her room, still resisting the importunity of his wife.

He added many common sense arguments, but Ruth would not listen. "I know that he is in trouble," she repeated.

"But if he were, which is most unlikely, you couldn't help him," Mr. Reynolds said bluntly. "In fact, you merely make matters worse."

When they found her obstinate they took silent counsel of one another, told her to wait a moment and vanished.

The instant they were gone Ruth slipped out of the house and boldly turned her face toward the hills now black against the unit sky.

All day she traveled, strangely alone in a populous country. Many natives she met, but they merely looked curiously at the white girl in western riding clothes, and as she avoided villages she escaped the notice of any one in authority.

She knew that when her absence was certain both Mr. Reynolds and Sir Donald would come after her.

Night came, and she was still pushing on, though hungry and weary. In the darkness she perforce kept to open paths, and it was on one of these that a panting native found her.

"Achmet!" she whispered when he raised his contorted face to hers. In a few words he told her what had happened. She said curtly. "I know that. Where is he?"

Sir Donald's former servant looked at her and remembered the strangeness of things done by white women.

He led the way back toward the hut, muttering now and again of the terrible things he had seen.

And while Ruth was thus defying all precedent and going to the aid of the man she loved Wilkerson had found himself again hemmed in, cut off in the darkness from escape to the city.

Though he and Dorr had driven the hillmen away from the hut and quenched their eagerness of assault, they still hovered in the little gullies, and on every hand the fugitive found himself

A RECENT U. S. GOVERNMENT REPORT Makes Plain Your Need of a UNITED STATES CREAM SEPARATOR With Guaranteed Non-rusting Skimming Device

The Scientific Staff of the Dairy Division in the United States Department of Agriculture recently conducted a series of experiments to learn what effect, if any, iron (rust) has on cream and butter. The tests definitely established the fact that even minute particles of iron (rust) caused certain undesirable flavors and that in every instance when butter was scored a few days after the making, the samples in which iron (rust) was present scored lower than the butter made from cream which contained no iron (rust). In using the United States Cream Separator with non-rusting skimming sections of solid nickel silver you avoid all risk of cream and butter with an "off" flavor. The U. S. Skimming sections are positively guaranteed never to rust. No other separator manufacturer gives you a printed non-rusting guarantee. Yet, United States Cream Separators, with this big exclusive improvement, are sold at no higher prices than other separators without it. A demonstration gladly given at your home, without obligation.
