PRESERVED MILK IS DEFENDED

San Francisco, Calif., April 7.—Humanity is to be benefited in divers ways by the Panama Pacific International Exposition, but in no way is the department of economics receive a more potent aid than in the solving of the milk problem. When it is realized that over sixty per cent of the nutriment of civilization is derived from milk which constitutes, with wheat, the greater part of the world's food product, the necessity for pure, sweet, clean milk and also that of its proper distribution involve a question whose answer will go far to solve many of the petty problems at present vexing the philanthropists and hygienists in their zeal for developing the potentialities of the race. There is a comprehensive answer to this question. It is evaporated milk. Now, possibly you, like many other folks not conversant with the subject, will throw up your hands in horror and exclaim, "What feed my child on boiled and sweetened and preserved milk? Never! Why I would not use it myself." If you make such a remark you are acknowledging an ignorance that the efficient housewife would flout. A visit to the milk Palace at the Panama Pacific International Exposition, an exhibit prepared with every thought for the instruction of the consumer, will teach you that evaporated milk is purer than bottled milk. In these days of crowded places, the demand for fresh milk is greater than the supply, and the cities stretch so far upon the country that in order to feed the multitudes, milk must be shipped fifty seventy-five or even a hundred miles and kept over night sometimes. It has therefore become necessary to use a preservative such as formalin or an equivalent in order to keep it from turning. The process of the evaporation as demonstrated at the Exposition does away with all erroneous beliefs regarding canned milk. A condenser in working order shows you that nothing but the purest milk from tested cows are used; that after it is tested and weighed by sanitary and hygienic appliances, it is brought almost to the boiling point when it is turned in to a vacuum cylinder where nearly every drop of water is evaporated. It is then cooled, put into cans, hermetically sealed and placed in a steam oven where it is sterilized.

after it is labeled it is ready for the market, and this without the infusion of one atom of extraneous matter. This is done right before your eyes, not a move being made that you are not able to scrutinize. The practical householders who have visited the exhibit leave enthusiastic over the lesson they have learned and fully resolved to become better acquainted with evaporated milk through experience instead of hearsay.

Splendid For Rheumatism.

"I think Chamberlain's Liniment is just splendid for rheumatism," writes Mrs. Dunburgh, Eldridge, N. Y. The quick relief from pain which Chamberlain's Liniment affords is alone worth many times the cost. Obtainable everywhere.
