Norman Desilet, of the White Grocery, is some wiser than he was last week. This customer came in and bought groceries, among them was an order for one barrel of Blue Stem flour. By law, four sacks is called a barrel, but to fill her order just as he took it, he goes and get an empty lime barrel and dumps the flour in it. After working two hours at the barrel gog, Mrs. Desilet stops him just before he got La Grande Blue Stem painted on the barrel.—

We don't suppose there are 100 persons in the city limits of this good old town that do not use some kind of breakfast food. The kind we are just telling about is put up in full 10-lb. sacks, only—not boxes. La Grande Milling Co. is painted on each sack. We want your grocer to tell you about it, which he will gladly do, as it's his business to help you cut down your living expense. It's made in a home mill, from wheat selected for the purpose. The name of the food is Germs, or Germea. Not long ago a full carload left here for Portland. Our advice for cutting down your living expenses is free. Yours respectfully, La Grande Milling Co., the Home of Blue Stem Flour. Adv. 5-13,1t.
