WOMAN PIONEER OF TWILIGHT SLEEP IS NOT PESSIMISTIC

PIONEER TWILIGHT SLEEP BABIES ARE VIGOROUS

Mrs. C. Temple Emmet, great-granddaughter of the original John Jacob Aster and pioneer twilight sleep mother of America, said at her country home, overlooking Smithtown Harbor, Long Island, that the doctors' controversy now going on here over the treatment has not lessened her belief in it in the slightest degree.

So confident is she, from her own experience, that twilight sleep is the ideal state at childbirth that she is preparing to pass through the sleep for the fourth time.

The next time she takes the treatment, however, it will be in this country and not abroad. The family expect to pass the summer at Paul Smith's in the Adirondacks, N. Y.

The three twilight sleep members of the Emmet household are Jane Erin seven; Winthrop, five, and William, four. The birth of each took place at Freiburg, Germany, where the twilight sleep methods originated. The five older children were brought by the stork in the old-fashioned way.

Mrs. Emmet is the honorary president of the Twilight Sleep Association, which has a growing membership and which plans to found a Twilight Sleep Hospital.

The three Twilight Sleep Emmet youngsters are sturdy, rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed, children, who can almost as fast as a gallon of gasoline can make a machine go. They look well able to tackle any kind of real food without the aid of a diet guide.

Mrs. Emmet appeared almost incredulous that anybody could actually doubt the benefit of twilight sleep. She made it plain that the trouble, in her opinion, is one of men, methods and equipment.
