BACTERIOLOGY.

False Claims Made of Legume Cultures.

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, April 24.—Information has come from several sources that agents for firms manufacturing legume cultures are making many false claims, and charging exorbitant prices for the cultures.

Some farmers have been told that no more fertilizer will ever be needed on their soil and that all soils need inoculation. This is absolutely untrue, for it is a well known fact that these cultures add nothing but nitrogen to the soil. Phosphates and potassium will have to be applied. Nor do all soils need inoculation. Only those which fail to grow legumes properly will be benefited by inoculation.

Whether a soil is deficient in nitrogen fixing organisms or not can be determined by an examination of the roots of some legume growing upon it. If the organisms are present in sufficient numbers there will be little nodules on the roots.

It is often advisable to use trial plots—that is, inoculate a small portion of the seed and plant it adjacent to some which has not been inoculated. Nitrogen deficiency may also be determined by a chemical analysis of the soil.

Some agents are reported to be selling their cultures for from two dollars to five dollars per acre, while like cultures may be obtained from the Oregon Experiment Station department of Bacteriology for the small sum of 40 cents for two acres, or 60 cents for from two to fifteen acres. Commercial cultures are just as good, but advantage is being taken of the farmers' lack of information.

Inoculation is of great benefit. It not only helps the legume but adds nitrogen to the soil, which will be available to subsequent crops. Leguminous crops probably add from 100 to 150 pounds of nitrogen per acre per year to the soil. If legumes are used as green manure the amount of nitrogen fixed in the soil will be greatly increased.
