COMING TO SHERRY'S

"THE BONDMAN"

William Farnham Has Great Part in Hall Caine Masterpiece.

William Farnham, one of the leading figures of filmdom, in "The Bondman" a picturization of Hall Caine's offering of the Sherry theater Thursday. A 9 reel rugged drama of Iceland and the Isle of Man, presented in the dramatic strength of the novel, the film is hailed as the greatest screen effort of Fox $100,000 star.

The story gives opportunity for picturesque photography, especially noteworthy being the festival scenes, 3000 people being in the employ of the company during the filming of the play. A large number of beautiful and original sea scenes are made possible by the action which takes place on the coast. The story of "The Bondman," already familiar to a countless number of people through the wide popularity of Hall Caine, concerns the love of the vagabond, Stephen Orry, and the daughter of the Danish Governor of Iceland. How love ripens between them, how Stephen wrongs his wife by leaving her and taking to himself another wife, and his remorse thereafter, make a foundation for the second part of the story, which concerns the two sons of Stephen Orry, grown to manhood. Jason is the son of Stephen and his first wife, and the woman that Stephen meets on the Isle of Man. When Stephen's wife dies her son, Jason, swears to avenge her wrongs by killing either his father or the father's son. This takes place in Iceland, and over on the Isle of Man Stephen is sending his son back on a quest of love to the wife and child he left behind. How Jason is thwarted by Providence every time he seeks his brother Sunlock's life and how finally he makes the greatest sacrifice of all—giving his life for his brother—makes a touching story.

Farnham plays both the roles of Stephen and Jason while Dorothy Bernard, a former Portland stock favorite, is seen in the character of Geobina, daughter of the Governor of the Isle of Man.

AT ARCADE

"Edge of the Abyss" Has An All-Star Cast.

An all star cast presents "The Edge of the Abyss," the Triangle play to be seen at the Arcade Theatre Wednesday and Thursday Mary Boland, Frank Mills and Willard Mack make up the combination. Mary Boland represents a butterfly of fashion, Alma Clayton. She brings out strongly the fickle nature of the girl who is quick to run the gamut of emotion in the search of a new sensation. First she is engaged to Robert McKim, an idle young man of wealth. Then she becomes interested in the able young criminal lawyer, Wayne Burroughs, played by Frank Mills.

Miss Boland is convincing and realistic in the quarrel scene with Frank Mills. Her mobile, beautiful face shows the gradations of petulance in the childish nature of the woman and her gradual rise to a tigerish fury when her husband refuses to humor her.

McKim is the idle man of pleasure to the life. He displays the lack of principle and cowardice of such a character emphatically by his slackness of figure and general indolence of expression and gesture.

Willard Mack has all the little mannerisms of the hardened criminal, but also manages to bring out the underlying idea of the rugged faithfulness of the man toward his benefactor, the lawyer.

Humor and Thrills in "A Submarine Pirate." There is a happy combination of humor and realism in the Triangle-Keystone "A Submarine Pirate." Syd Chaplin supplies the humor in big doses, but it was owing to the enterprise of the Triangle forces and the permission of the navy department, headed by Secretary Daniels, that a real, sure enough submarine and a gunboat were used in the pictures. There is accordingly an educational value and interest and thrill to spare in seeing an actual submarine in operation. It is seen plowing its way through the billows of the Pacific, then submerging and then rising to the surface. The complicated interior, with all its engines and its torpedo firing apparatus and also the means by which its small surface guns are kept in readiness in completeness. It is just as thrilling, it would seem, as actually taking a trip in a submarine.

Of course these are secrets that the government must keep from foreign nations. Secretary Daniels and battleship commanders had to pass on the screen at a special exhibition at Washington, arranged by General Sweeney John McKeon of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The navy's approval gave it their enthusiastic approval. In fact, they are going to use the film to show at navy recruiting stations throughout the United States to encourage enlistments.
