PAULINE FREDERICK IN NEW GUISE.

Eschews Role of Siren to Play "Audrey" in Famous Players Adaptation of a Great Novel.

Pauline Frederick, whose beauty and powerful emotional histrionism have made her the foremost dramatic actress on the screen today, is the star of the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "Audrey," an adaptation of the celebrated novel by Mary Johnson, adapted into dramatic form by Harriet Ford and E. F. Boddington, which is the feature at the Arcade Friday and Saturday. In "Audrey" Miss Frederick abandons the siren role which she has so wonderfully presented in "Zaza," "Bella Donna," and several other powerful dramatic Famous Players productions in which she has starred.

"Audrey" is the innocent cause of a serious duel, when, despite her unsophistication, reflections are cast upon her character by the brother of the girl with whom Lord Haward, her guardian, has been in love. Haward presents the imputations concerning Audrey's conduct and the duel in which he is severely wounded results. The false impressions concerning Audrey's character have spread rapidly throughout the town and the situation reaches a climax when she is denounced from the pulpit on Sunday. As a result of this, she is turned out of the home in which she has been a drudge ever since she was old enough to work and seeks refuge with an old woman who is reputed to be a witch. The townsfolk, enraged at the thought that she is under the influence of the "witch" attempt to kill them both.

Audrey escapes drowning only by the narrowest margin and it is the news of her peril that awakens in Lord Haward a realization of what this wild, carefree girl means to him. Despite his wounds, he rushes to her rescue. There is another lover to be reckoned with—a half-breed Indian, whose methods of wooing are picturesque in their crudity.

"Audrey" differs from Miss Frederick's previous screen characterizations in the great feeling of sympathy which she arouses. This is the dominant note in "Audrey" as we see this poor girl made a mere clayey and later accused of conduct of which she is entirely innocent. The persecution of Audrey, her battles against poverty and the narrow-minded gossip of her little community, develop one of the strongest and most lovable characters that Miss Frederick has played on the screen.

Robert Vignola directed "Audrey," in which Miss Frederick has among her supporting cast Charles Waldron, Margaret Christians, E. Fernandez, Helen Lindrith, Henry Hallam and Jack Clark.
