JAPANESE PATIENCE.

A Strong Man's Challenge to an Artist and the Result.

Maruyama Okyo was the founder of the naturalistic school of Japanese painting. He was born in 1735 and died in 1795. In the International Studio Mr. Harad Jiro tells this story about Okyo:

Tanikaze Kajimoku was a champion wrestler. One day he called on Maruyama Okyo and proposed a trial of strength, each according to his own line of pursuit. He would show the greatest feat he was capable of by his physical strength, and Okyo would show his by his ability to paint. Okyo agreed. The next morning he was awakened by the sound of something falling outside the door of his house. He opened the door and found Tanikaze standing by a rock large enough to tax the strength of a dozen ordinary men. He had brought it, without resting, all the way from Mount Kurama, many miles distant.

Now it was Okyo's turn. He gave lessons to his pupils as usual, but spent every available minute in his private atelier, working very far into the night. Tanikaze called four or five times, but was told that the painting was not yet ready.

At last, after four months had passed, the wrestler said to the painter, "If you cannot show me your work today I think it is only fair to consider myself as the winner of the contest. I came here today prepared to take the rock back to the mountain." "I have finished the work," answered Okyo, with a smile. And he presented to Tanikaze a roll of silk. Tanikaze slowly unrolled it—it was seven feet long—and looked at it in amazement. "Has this taken you four months to paint?" he asked. "Does this represent your greatest skill?" His surprise was not altogether unjustified, for the artist had painted nothing except a stringed bow in its actual size. Then Okyo calmly explained the matter as follows:

"This is a picture of the bow you received from the emperor when you had the honor of wrestling in the palace grounds. The greatest achievement in it is the drawing of this cord. To draw a straight line over six feet long without anything for a guide is by no means an easy task. Just as you brought the rock from the mountain without resting, so I have drawn this line with a single stroke of the brush. Many a time in my attempts the line faltered or the ink gave out before the line was finished. I have experienced with the brush a hardship such as you encountered with the rock on your way from Kurama. Come and see the proof."

So saying he led Tanikaze to his atelier and emptied a large box full of papers and rolls of silk that he had spoiled in his endeavor to draw in a single sweep of the brush a straight line over six feet in length. Tanikaze was thoroughly convinced. He raised the drawing to his brow in token of gratitude and left Okyo, promising that he would treasure it and hand it down to his posterity and praising the artist for his perseverance and steadfastness of purpose.

The Roman Forum.

The Forum was originally a market place and only by degrees became the center of Roman civic and political life. About B. C. 470 it became the place of assembly of the people in their tribes and was gradually adorned with temples and other great public buildings. The Roman forum—the Acropolis at Athens alone excepted—is perhaps the most thrillingly interesting spot on earth to such as know and appreciate the teachings of history. From the forum came the august laws which governed the then known world for more than a thousand years.

CHINESE PUNISHMENTS.

Flogging Is Common, and Rank Does Not Protect an Offender.

Chinese lawgivers are not troubled with any sentimental scruples on the subject of flogging. Even a criminal condemned to death is given a preliminary thrashing instead of, as with us, being treated with sympathy and consideration until the hour of doom. Another feature of Chinese justice, so far as the lash is concerned, is its strict impartiality. Highborn offenders are flogged as relentlessly as criminals of the lower orders. The back of many a silken robed dignitary has been scored with the leather thongs of the whips wielded by sturdy Chinese officials, whose duty it has been to lay on the lash heavily, regardless of the rank of the victim, on pain of being flogged themselves. The Chinese legal code prescribes the lash for many offenses so trivial that in Europe they would be quite outside the scope of the law. Not all of the enactments are enforced nowadays, but we may quote two of them as quaint examples. Fifty lashes were ordered to be given to any merchant or tradesman offering for sale goods not of the quality they are represented to be, while self glorification is discouraged by a law that any military man who raises a monument to himself for deeds of heroism which he has never performed is to receive 100 lashes.—Pearson's Weekly.

HANGING PICTURES.

This is a Task That Should Produce Artistic Results.

In going over one's pictures eliminate all but the choicest and best beloved and try to group together the pictures whose subjects are somewhat related or which have a similarity in frames. Indeed, even when subjects are closely related it is not possible always to hang pictures together owing to a too great difference in the kind of frames. As a rule, any room looks better, especially small rooms, where only one color frame is used on all pictures, but if this is not possible then the next best thing is to keep all of the pictures in gilt frames in one part of the room, all of the dark framed pictures on another wall, etc.

Also one can get the best results by separating water colors and prints, and etchings or engravings should, of course, always be hung apart from other pictures. Another point frequently overlooked is the wisdom of putting the darker pictures on the wall that receives the best light from windows and contrariwise the gilt framed pictures of lighter subjects where they may serve to brighten a dark part of the room.

Finally do not crowd the walls. Hang pictures well in line with the eyes of a person of average height and, of course, choose plain walls, tinted or papered, for backgrounds.—Albany Argus.

How He Took It.

"In training," said an instructor in athletics, "the strictest obedience is required. Whenever I think of the theory of training I think of Dash, who, after eighteen years of married life, is one of the best and happiest husbands in the world."

"Dash," I once said to him, "well, Dash, old man, how do you take married life?"

"According to directions," he replied.

The Clans of Scotland.

The clans of Scotland are generally understood to have arisen about the year 1008, during the reign of King Malcolm II. The legal power of the chiefs and the other remains of heritable jurisdiction were abolished in Scotland about 1740.
