BLYDENSTEIN'S

PREPARED DIETARY FLOUR

Ask your physician, he will advise. Use Bran and Coarse Flour for Constipation, etc., in preference to Medicine.

Dietary Flour makes buns and bread that taste good.

Made from clean bran and a flour rich in gluten and mineral salts natural to the wheat—it does not have that branny taste.

PRISONER WANTS OUT

APPEALING LETTER SENT FROM PRISON.

Pendleton Atorneys Cited to "Praying Folks in Germany."

Pendleton, Aug. 17.—John Schultz, former Umatilla county man now making his temporary home in Salem is of the opinion that this is a cold and cruel world. And this in spite of the fact that the state is paying for his board and lodging and will continue to do so for some time to come.

Mr. Schultz is one of those unfortunate whose ideas of property rights are somewhat vague and he is at present a ward of the state government because of those ideas. Notwithstanding the fact that he was sent to the state prison through the ministrations of County Attorney Steiwer and Circuit Judge Phelps, he entertains the highest regard for those gentlemen and recently addressed to them jointly a lachrymose appeal dilating on the hard heartedness of the members of the State Board of Parole and expressing a longing to return to the old sod in Germany, where he pictures his old parents, "kneeling beside an old fashioned bed, their eyes turned to the sky, waiting for the return of their loved one."

He is of the belief that the only reason the board has refused to grant him pardon is because he was once incarcerated in another penitentiary for a similar offense as the one for which he is now serving a sentence. He does not think that is any valid reason for keeping a man away from home.

Schultz was sent from Pendleton for breaking into a tent where he stole one dollar and a broken revolver. He bought whisky with the dollar and proceeded to try and hold up a police officer with the gun.

His letter to the attorney follows: Salem, Ore., July 16, 1916.—Mr. Gilbert Phelps, District Judge, and Mr. Frederik Steiwer, County Attorney, Pendleton, Oregon. Dear Sir:—Pardon me, for again intruding upon your valuable time, but I wish to show my appreciation, for what you and Judge Phelps endeavored to do for me, viz., recommending me for executive clemency, which I am very sorry to state was not granted to me. I received from the Board of Parole instructions, or rather word that they recommended me to do my maximum sentence. Why?

As I have been informed by Warden John W. Minto, that they so recommended on account of my having had the misfortune to be incarcerated in these institutions before! I explained to Warden Minto, that you gentlemen were aware of that fact before passing sentence upon me. I also told him that you was under the impression that I would receive good time on my maximum sentence, which has been abolished since 1913.

Now, gentlemen, if you are still convinced that two years is sufficient punishment for the enormity of the crime I was sentenced for, I beg of you as fair minded men to appeal to the Governor to commute my sentence to two years, which would leave me out September 5, 1916.

Go, if you will, to the land of battle and strife and there in an old country home you will find a couple that to me are dearer than life. In mind I can see them kneeling beside an old fashioned bed with their eyes cast to the God in the skies, praying for the return of their loved one. Thanking you in advance for any assistance you may render me, I remain,
JOHN SCHULTZ.

Measuring The Mississippi

One of the basic lines of activity of the United States Geological Survey is the measurement of the flow of the rivers of the United States. This work was begun by the Survey in 1888 in connection with special studies of water for irrigation, and since 1895 the bills passed by Congress appropriating money for the work of the Survey have carried an item "for gaging streams." Measurements of flow have been made at about 3,400 points in the United States and at many points in small areas in Seward Peninsula and the Yukon-Tanana region, Alaska, and in the Hawaiian Islands. Numerous private and State organizations have cooperated in the work either by furnishing data or by providing financial assistance in collecting the data. In July, 1914, about 1,480 gaging stations were being maintained by the Survey and the cooperating organizations, and many measurements of discharge were made at other points.

A report just issued on the lower Mississippi River basin (Water-Supply Paper 387), which forms Part VII of the annual series entitled "Surface water supply of the United States," gives the results of cooperative work between the Federal Survey and the States of Colorado and New Mexico. The records presented include descriptions of stations on Arkansas and Red rivers and their tributaries in the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Oklahoma at which measurements were made, and tables of daily gage heights and daily and monthly discharge. An appendix to the report gives a list of the gaging stations that have been maintained by the Survey, from 1885 to 1914, on streams discharging into the Mississippi below the mouth of the Ohio and a list of the Survey publications relating to water resources in the area.

Owing to its technical character the report lacks interest for the general reader, but it will be useful to engineers and other concerned in the utilization of the streams. Copies may be obtained without charge by applying to the Director, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.
