ARCADE

Husband's Revenge Is "The Moral Fabric" Theme.

The man who said all variations on dramatic themes had been used up is invited by Producer Thomas H. Ince to see "The Moral Fabric," a new Triangle-Kay Bee release starring Frank Mills. Now showing at the Arcade theatre for two days.

"The Moral Fabric," from a scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan and produced under the general supervision of Ince, starts out from a premise that is unapparently familiar to many women. Amy Winthrop is the wife of a very wealthy man. Her husband grants her every whim, and she has absolutely nothing in the shape of responsibility.

Moving about among people quite as irresponsible as herself, Amy absorbs much of their small talk. Presently she is persuaded to join a "new era" organization known as the Invictus club, which is headed by Mackley Stuart, handsome, rich, and with nothing to do. The specific policy of the club is dissemination of the propaganda of "free love." And of course Amy learns most of the maxims from the lips of Mackley Stuart.

She absorbs so many of these ideas, in fact, that she begins to think of her husband as a dull, prosaic creature.

And therefore on the occasion of her fourth wedding anniversary, when Winthrop brings her home a jeweled pendant as symbol of the permanence of his affection, he finds her in Stuart's arms. At first she is startled, but, recovering her poise, she tells her husband that Stuart is her "elective" mate and that, as she prefers Stuart to him, it is folly to interfere with their going away together. Indeed, Winthrop promptly admits the force of this logic, and they go.

But there is one thing Winthrop can do, and that is to prevent Stuart from carrying out his very obvious plan of taking Amy away without marrying her and, when he has tired of her, of deserting her and going his way. So he calls up the papers and gives out the news that he has relinquished his wife in favor of Mackley Stuart at the request of the couple. With all the consequent publicity, Stuart is compelled to make Amy his wife.

A couple of years pass. Winthrop is broken in spirit and health. To repair the latter, he takes a trip abroad. In a cafe in Naples he sees Amy and Stuart at a nearby table. They invite him to their villa. He goes.

Soon he is craftily dining into their ears the specious twaddle of "free love" with which Stuart first won Amy. And at last Amy, who has grown tired of Stuart, as Winthrop knew she would, falls in love again with her former husband.

And then the unexpected happens. Winthrop takes a full and complete revenge on the pair, both of whom he thoroughly despises.

Pervading The Whole Country

THE COMMUNITY MAUSOLEUM IDEA is fast pervading the whole Country. This is evidenced by the following article taken from a recent issue of Mercantile and Financial Times, New York:

"That we, in this twentieth century, are becoming broader and more progressive in our views, not only in respect to those things which concern life, but death, is indicated by the growing sentiment in favor of a more scientific way of burying our dead. This is quite as it should be, for we have much to learn from the ancients as to the disposition of the remains of our loved ones, and who shall say that burying in the ground is more civilized than placing the dead in the boughs of trees, as the American Indians did before they adopted the ways of the white man? While striving for the highest ideals in the evolution of conditions which make toward economic and moral betterment of the living, why not continue those efforts by preserving as far as possible the mortal remains of those whose souls we have striven to elevate? In truth, 'the paths of glory lead but to the grave,' yet those who have achieved glory and the veneration of their kind, are fitting of better recognition for their services upon earth than a mere hole in it after they have finished their life's work.

"Now, however, it is possible to have the funeral cortege drive up to the entrance of a large moisture and vermin proof structure of handsome and substantial design, carry the casket into a chapel where the final services are said under the proper conditions and passing through a corridor, deposit the remains in their final resting place in a crypt which is permanently sealed. These are known as COMMUNITY MAUSOLEUMS, and are to be found in some of the leading cities of this country, and in the smaller towns as well. These are constructed and equipped in a special manner, fully protected by patents, and at a cost not to exceed the ordinary burial in a cemetery lot.

"It is naturally impossible to go into any extended explanation of these modern mausoleums in an article of this limited scope. It may be pointed out, however, that all dangers of contagion by the living visiting the burial place of the dead, as in the case of cemeteries, are absolutely eliminated. Each crypt is equipped with drain and gas vents with automatic valve and air-tight pipes through which the gases are conducted to the disinfecting plant to be purified before being released into the open air. These beautiful mausoleums may, therefore, be visited as freely as desired and in all kinds of weather.

"They are sold just the same as real estate, perpetual title being given without taxes or assessments. The purchaser is given a key and permitted free access at all times, and from the sale of each compartment a certain amount is set aside to provide an annual income sufficient to maintain the building in first-class condition. The compartments may be sold and transferred as other real estate.

"In these days when all progressive communities strive to improve the character of their public and private buildings, COMMUNITY MAUSOLEUMS are quite the thing and infinitely superior to the cemetery, which eventually may have to give way to business expansion. Those mausoleums which have already been erected have contributed materially to the architectural beauty of the cities where they have been erected, and the advantages which they have conferred by the improvement of sanitary conditions and the knowledge that they provide absolute insurance against grave robbery are of that class whose value is not to be measured in dollars and cents."
