Coats Are Growing Longer
 In the September Woman's Home Companion the fashion editor says: "Coats are conspicuously showing the descending line. Autumn suit coats will vary in length from twenty-eight to thirty-eight inches, thirty-four inches being the most popular length; while forty-eight inches is a good length for the separate coat."
 "Plaits and panels are featured. The flare is not as prominent as in the spring models. This does not mean that they are not wide at the bottom, for they are. The separate coats, especially, show a sweep at the hem. Some have the upper portion made with fitted lines, others hang loose from the shoulders.
 "Push, velour, panaela—which is the short nap French velvet—and imitation fur fabrics are all good materials for these coats. The leading novelty in these imitations is Rodier's oederella, a close imitation of Persian lamb.
 "These suit coats and separate coats alike rely upon their collars and cuffs for their novelty note, and I assure you they have not relied in vain. The cape collar, about the only real military note in the new fashions, and the high wrinkled crush collars, are the leaders. They both have the big clumsy look in common—it is regarded as their chief style note. Some of these collars may be worn two ways, buttoned up close about the neck, or laid out flat in cape style.
 "Many of the separate coats have kimono sleeves, often so stitched that they have a raglan effect. The full leg o' mutton style is seen, too, made with deep flaring cuffs.
 "Suit coats are not showing many long shouldered effects. The armhole is generally the regular size. The sleeve most favored is the regulation coat sleeve with nothing new or unusual about it until the cuff is reached. Then comes the novelty. Very deep cuffs are worn, fur- and button-trimmed. Big, flaring, inverted bell cuffs are fashionable, lined with a contrasting, often gay color. There are cuffs that swing out from the sleeve with a big button and button-band caught together and to the sleeve with a big button and button-hole, in fact, there is no end to the cuff novelties.

 "In the early fall many women of fashion will include in their wardrobes, French-looking pelerines of satin. These long coats were first made by Callot."

Elgin Schools Open Soon.
 A. E. Clawson, superintendent of Elgin schools, has issued the following statement to school patrons of that district:
 "The Elgin schools will open Sept. 4, and patrons of the school should arrange to have their children in school first day; especially those students who are to begin high school work.

 "Every effort possible has been made to secure the very best teachers for this school year and the quality of work given will be equal to that given in the best standard high schools.
 "All departments of the public school will be given consideration: physical as well as intellectual. While we do not believe in giving undue attention to athletics, yet we should like to see Elgin have a good strong football team and basketball team this fall and winter and a winning track team in the spring.
 "The superintendent desires to meet a few days before school opens, all young men who expect to take part in football, and to meet especially all the last year's 8th grade pupils."
