Slogan Is Wanted.
Portland, Ore., Sept. 13.—The Portland Chamber of Commerce is offering cash prizes for a slogan that will be indicative of the progressive spirit of the city, and one that can be adopted and supported by all her business men and citizens of every walk in life. They want a live slogan, and one that means something. Oakland made a tremendous hit with its slogan of "My City, Oakland." Those words convey the idea of a personal interest in the prosperity and advancement of Oakland, a personal pride in her achievements and a personal conviction of civic duty. The contest will close September 30th. Anybody in the Portland trade territory may enter the contest, and may send as many slogans as they choose. Address them to the slogan committee, Portland Chamber of Commerce. The first prize is $25 in gold, the second $10 and the third $5.

A Bear Bore Knives.

For thirteen long years Martin King, of Kameia, Oregon, has spent his summer vacation months on Bear creek and Emery creek in pursuit of pleasure, wealth and—bear.

It has nothing to do with this story to remark that Mr. King has pulled a thirty years except to give a little local atmosphere with which to surround our tale.

Now, around mountain camp-fires and miners' tables for the past two years, there have been rumors of a deadly struggle between a cosmopolitan mine-owner and a strictly local bear. It is only lately that the facts have filtered through the truth and veracity agency of Martin King, who would rather die than disgrace the name of George Washington.

It seems that C. W. Smith of the El Oro and Martin King of anti-Ananias fame, concocted a fishing excursion along Emery creek. An arsenal of big guns was considered and rejected, and armed only with Colorado spinners and a hunting-knife, the two fishermen reached the creek, which is heavily fringed with willows.

Mr. Smith advanced into the thick cover, Mr. King as guide, philosopher and friend, following at a respectful distance.

All at once Mr. Smith came upon two full-grown bears, at close quarters, feeding upon the carcass of a sheep. One of the animals, mistaking Mr. Smith for a cannibal, struck at him and only an intervening willow and a supervening Providence saved the intrepid fisherman from serious harm.

Taking advantage of bruin's foul, and encouraged by King, who gallantly directed the fight from the rear,

Mr. Smith plunged the knife into the jugular vein of the bear and all was over but the gurgling. Following out his original impulse and possibly acting under hypnotic influence—King winks and intimates that it came from the rear—Smith withdrew the blade and made a similar lunge at the second bear, which had been watching the proceedings in mute astonishment, and buried the blade in the neck of the second bear also. But just as he was about to give the dextrous twist that nearly beheaded his first victim and made Victor Hugo's devil-fish slayer immortal, the animal started violently backward, wrenched the weapon from the hunter's hand and disappeared in the underbrush.

Notable as is this feat of courage and daring, Mr. Smith has never claimed any prestige and when the laurels are offered Mr. K. he merely winks again and proceeds to relate the astonishing scientific outcome as the result of Mr. King's patient investigations.

The bear that bore away both knife and wound was a mother bear and in due time gave birth to a litter of cubs. The fluffy little fellows were healthy and normal except that by some strange pre-natal influence each one carried a mark in the form of a hunting knife in the neck.

On the anniversary of the memorable fight, Mr. King asserts without winking, those knives began "working" and slew the dam—and in fact the whole dam family.—Camas Prairie Courier.

A night school is to be started at Grants Pass provided enough interest is shown to make the plan worth while.
