QUAINT HAWAIIAN TROOP TO SING

A big treat is in store for theater goers of La Grande who like the quaint Hawaiian music as sung by true native-born Hawaiians.

Kulolia's Hawaiian Truopadors have leased the Arcade Theater for October 5th and on that date will be seen in an elaborate musical program, "The Paradise of the Pacific." This show comes very highly recommended. It recently closed a week's engagement at the Pickford Theater, Portland where it played to capacity houses during the entire engagement.

The company carries their own scenery and their entertainment consists of quartets, solos and several numbers on the original cigar-box violin.

Kulolia, who heads this aggregation claims the distinction of being the first Hawaiian ever to tour this country. He filled engagements at the Buffalo Fair, Panama Pacific Fair, and but recently came from the San Diego Fair. He is considered the foremost Hawaiian tenor in this country. Others of the company include Princess Ahieni, the Hula-Hula dancer, Bill Ahlett one of the finest Hawaiian basso singers and Henry Ahieni, a steel player of well known renown.

ARCADE

Much Action in "Sunshine Dad."

The story of "Sunshine Dad," coming to the Arcade Sunday, the new Triangle Fine Arts comedy, in which DeWolf Hopper stars, revolves about the theft of a diamond band from a Hindu shrine. Count Kotchoff steals the prized jewels, and discovery of their loss causes the Hindoos to search vigilantly for them. The Count assumes a disguise, and with his purloined wealth takes Widow Marimore to a cafe. There they meet Alonzo Evergreen, a sporty old gentleman who is entertaining a party of chorus girls on a lone silver dollar. When it comes time to settle the bill, the count slips out with the widow, leaving Alonzo to pay for several quarts of wine.

Being watched by the Hindoos the Count gives the diamond band to Widow Marimore. She wears it as a garter at a dance, and in the mazes of the lame duck it falls off. Alonzo picks it up, and being in convivial spirits he playfully sticks it in his pocket. The next morning, while at his office, he discovers the band. Seeing the widow's advertisement for its return he wraps it up in a package and encloses his compliments on one of his son's cards.

Alonzo, who has discovered that his package has disappeared, and learning that Minerva has taken it, rushes to Minerva's home. He assumes that she is wearing the band as a garter and he makes repeated efforts to assure himself of the fact. Just then Fred appears on the scene with the band, demanding explanations, which Alonzo makes.

The Hindoos suspect Widow Marimore of having the stolen band. To frighten her into confessing, they gradually open the door of a cage in which Alonzo is confined.

They are chased by the lion and have several narrow escapes from death.

The outcome is a screamingly funny series of situations calculated to make "Sunshine Dad" the best Hopper release so far.

SHERRY'S

Drink and Regeneration Theme of New Metro Play.

"The Devil at His Elbow," a startling five-part Metro wonder play in which Clifford Bruce and Dorothy Green, two supreme dramatic artists are seen in the stellar roles, will be the feature attraction at the Sherry theater on Sunday and Monday. This production contains scores of big situations presented on an elaborate scale in genuine settings on New York's waterfront, on board a big steamer at sea and on a submarine obtained from the United States Navy. The story was written by Aaron Hoffman, who has written all the features for Mme. Petrova since she has been appearing in motion pictures. It deals with the subject of drink and its evil influence when taken by a mechanical engineer as a stimulant to continue in an almost super-human endeavor to complete plans for a new submarine.

Mining in Baker.

With the mines at Cornucopia sustaining their reputation as the biggest gold producers in the northwest, the Rainbow keeping up its record of high production, the Iron Dyke shipping 50 or more carloads of copper, Sumpter making a good showing and Greenhorn looking well, Baker county is making an output of production that augurs well for the future.—Baker Democrat.
