MARY PICKFORD Friday & Saturday ARCADE

A Curious American Custom.
I do not know that Viscount Kaneko can be reckoned among the great men of Japan, but he is certainly one of her most interesting sons. He has been prominent in governmental and legislative circles, but he is unpopular in some quarters because of his pro-Americanism. No one in Japan understands America and Americans better, and, as he says, he has given seventeen years of his life to explaining American ways to the Japanese. No wonder that he understands America, for he was educated in the Rice Grammar School of Boston, in the Boston Latin School and Harvard College, and Mount Desert and Cape Ann are as familiar to him as to any New Englander. He was in college with Colonel Roosevelt and knows him well.

"I have camped out with American boys," he said, "and lived with them in their homes. In every home they had family prayers, and at first when they kneeled down I didn't know what to do, but I soon learned."
In this respect his experience was, I am afraid, unique.—The Christian Herald.

Collier Chases His Elusive Night Cap.

"The No-Good Guy," the new Triangle-Ince release starring William Collier, follows out the usual Triangle policy of incorporating in one story something for all ages. Therefore, in this film there is ample provision made for the children.

Collier, in character as Jimmy Coghlan, arrives home after a wild evening and prepares for bed. His valet, hardest-working man in the world next to the proverbial one-armed paper-hanger with the hives, tries to put him to bed.

He insists on smoking a cigarette. The valet tries to persuade him not to for fear he will set the house afire; and, finding his pleadings of no avail, undertakes to take the cigarette away from him. But Jimmy holds it in his teeth, and the valet has a bad five minutes.

At last Jimmy gets rid of his troublesome valet and has his room to himself. He goes for a drink; but just as his fingers are about to close on the decanter, decanter skips away from him to another place on the table. The glass does the same thing; so at last Jimmy gives it up as a problem too difficult for human solution, and prepares for bed.

As he is about to put his foot into bed, the bed slips away from him. He goes after it. It plays a game of hide-and-seek with him about a room already crowded with furniture. In short, before Jimmy has succeeded in retiring, he has made a last contribution to the gaiety of nations—and to the children of nations in particular.

This amusing comedy drama will be shown at the Arcade Wednesday and Thursday.

Clerk Charged With Trying to Date Girl.

Portland, Oregon, October 5.—Frank Blake, clerk in a local paper company, who was arrested by Patrolman C. S. Shad last night on a charge of disorderly conduct in trying to "date" a girl with whom he had come in touch through an advertisement for a stenographer, failed to appear in the municipal court this morning and his bail of $100 was forfeited.

Blake was arrested at Broadway and Washington street where he was waiting to meet the 13-year-old girl who had applied to him for a position. The girl reported his conduct after the first interview to Mrs. Lela G. Baldwin of the women's protective division, and Mrs. Elizabeth Mocrad, Mrs. Baldwin's assistant, accompanied the girl when she went to keep the appointment, and caused Blake's arrest when he appeared.

A One-Legged Octogenarian's Feet.

Count Okuma's physical courage, too, has often been put to the test, as we have seen, and never more severely than at the recent coronation of the reigning emperor, when it was his duty to go up the long flight of stairs leading to the throne on his knees to present to the emperor the address of the people.

It would have been a hard climb for a young man with two sound knees. It must have been torture to the Count, with only the stump of a leg and the weight of nearly fourscore years added. But he never flinched, and on ten million postcards and on as many more souvenir cups, plates, napkins, tablecloths and furoshikis he is represented as climbing to somely those stairs, sacred to every Japanese, to the august presence on the throne. It is currently reported that the flesh of his leg was raw long before he reached the top, but no one was allowed to suspect it at the time.—The Christian Herald.

ELLA HALL AND HERBERT RAWLINSON IN "LITTLE EVE EDGERTON"

Ella Hall plays the leading role in "Little Eve Edgerton," a Bluebird Photoplay to be exhibited at the Sherry theatre today and tomorrow with Herbert Rawlinson her leading man. The story originally was printed in Everybodys Magazine and thousands of immensely interested readers will delight in seeing the narrative pictured in Bluebird's most approved fashion. There is an element of comedy mixed with the potent appeal of an unusual love story; the characters are enated by players especially chosen to give the photodrama its best possible interpretation, and being a film story without crime or villainy, there is promise of the best grade entertainment without bids for sensationalism.

The beautiful new Rialto theatre—San Francisco seating 1600—chose this Bluebird photoplay for its opening attraction.
