Cat Fur in Demand. St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 16.—This is a bad season for cats. Minnesota farmers, according to the state agricultural bureau, have received numerous offers from eastern fur houses, saying cat fur will take the place of more expensive fur for dress and cloak trimmings. Gopher farm boys got the tip and started to help convert all possible felines into imported colarettes. Fur dealers here are paying $2 each for the furs.

Callahan Unenvied Man. New York, Oct. 16.—(United Press)—Jimmy Callahan, who made way for Clarence Rowland when Charley Comiskey decided Callahan was not the man to manage the White Sox into an American League pennant, has done some things to the Pirates which may elevate the Pittsburgh club to a point where it again will become a pennant contender. Jimmy has tinkered here and there, dropped players changed the positions of others, and has put a little more all around fight into nearly every corner of the squad.

Fred Clarke bequeathed Callahan several good ball players, among them being of course, Hans Wagner. Callahan also found Max Carey, Al Mamaux, Bill Hunchman, Douglas Baird, Doc Johnston, Cooper Bob Harmon, Dan Costello, Jimmy Voix, Gibson and Murphy. Of these only a few remain and their places are being filled by youngsters who are learning to play the Callahan brand of baseball. Callahan always has been a marvel at developing pitchers.

LET US SPRAY NEW SLOGAN

Apropos to the question of marketing apples, care of orchards and other problems right now confronting the man who placed money in apple orchards, is an editorial in a Portland paper which Grande Ronde growers who have read it say hits the nail on the head. The article says: Waste of the Apple Crop. "It was a famous Pacific coast manufacturer of mustard condiments who said that it was the mustard the people left on the plate that had made him rich. It appears also that the waste of apples in the United States has a distinct bearing on the market for that fruit and the price paid by the consumer. The forthcoming crop of apples is estimated at 67,670,000 barrels, which is something more than 200,000,000 bushels, or nearly two bushels for every man, woman and child in the country. How many millions of our people never get even an apple cannot be estimated, but the number is large. This is due to two factors—waste in the orchard and faulty distribution. Millions of bushels—too many to calculate—not on the ground in sections where the growers do not believe it profitable to market them. Other large quantities are lost by poor storage; still more by shipping to markets that already have been glutted, though there may be other towns and cities not far away that have insufficient supplies. "One of the important elements in waste is failure to produce fruit of quality worth picking and shipment. The Pacific Northwest learned this lesson measurably some years ago, but there are growers even yet who do not realize its importance. This season has been particularly trying because the high price of various insecticides and fungicides has induced parsimony in their application. We cannot afford to neglect our fruit trees altogether just because there is a war in Europe. And in some districts pests are getting foothold that will be making trouble long after the war is over. It must be kept in mind that we ourselves are responsible in a high degree for a public taste that demands excellent fruit or will buy none. The cull apple is practically a total waste. Even the space it occupies on the tree is devoted to the production of worse than nothing. But the grower who picks his fruit at all must pick the poor fruit with the good and then reject it in the sorting. It all takes time, and time is money these days. The difference between a clean orchard and a half-cull one is the difference between profit and loss. "As for the problem of feast and famine in communities not far apart, with which any student of the situation is familiar, we are accomplishing something, although not enough, in the direction of correcting the evil by organized marketing and good advertising. Doubtless this will work out in good time. But it must not be forgotten that the orchards we now have should either be cared for or uprooted. The present time is appropriate for the Autumn cleaning up, for horticultural prophylaxis, for laying the foundation for next year's crop. After the present crop has been harvested and until the unfavorable weather of Winter sets in, the motto of every orchardist should be, 'Let us spray!'
