ARCADE

Risk Husband's Love, to Save Her Sister.

Occasionally there is found a man who, when he loves and is beloved, looks only at the present and the future, never into the past. If there has been a dark chapter in the woman's life, it makes no difference to him.

But more there are who must believe that there has been no one else—whose jealousy reaches back into every year that has gone before. Because of such men, women tell lies. They conceal the misstep, if there has been one, rather than risk the loss of the man's love.

Such a woman is Grace Marshall, in the new Triangle play, "Not My Sister," starring Bessie Barriscale and Wm. Desmond, which is coming to the Arcade Wednesday and Thursday. Wronged by a sculptor, in her early years, while working as a model for him, she marries later and is happy in her home until the artist comes again into her life, this time with his evil eye fixed upon her younger sister, whom he asks to pose.

Grace has never told anyone of the man's treatment of her. Unwilling now to confess to her husband and her mother, she is forced to allow her sister to accept the sculptor's offer, but goes daily with the younger girl to the studio, to see that no harm befalls her. Soon the husband is filled with jealousy.

Shall she stay away from the studio, and let her sister go to disgrace? Or shall she, to reveal the reason for her visits to the artist, confess to her husband and risk the loss of his love?

It is an appalling problem to the woman. Before it has been solved, the artist lies dead with a knife in his heart, there has been an arrest, a murder trial, and a confession from an unexpected source, making one of the most intense series of events seen on the screen in many a day.

In the support of the stars are Franklin Ritchie as the husband, Alice Taaffe as the younger sister, and Louis Brownell as the mother. The story is the joint work of James Montgomery, well-known as a playwright for the speaking stage, and C. Gardner Sullivan, writer of many noteworthy picture plays.

GOSSIP FROM NEW YORK

New York, Oct. 17.—(Special)—The people who live in great cities are cultivating more and more, the "out-of-door habit." New York still entertains its old-fashioned fondness for bright lights and the Great White Way, but notwithstanding the delights derived from these sources, there has been a growing envy of the freedom from restraints enjoyed by people in less crowded communities. Base ball, formerly constituted the principal resource of city folks in seeking out-of-door amusements. Of course, in New York there are the boat rides down the bay, with afternoons and evenings at the beaches. (But the diversions are simply brief respites from the routine of life spent in houses and offices. The "movies" were among the first to provide out-of-door shows, and they thereby increased their popularity. Some of the hotels established roof gardens, which became immensely popular and usually very expensive. There have been affairs held in New York's out-of-doors during the present season, among which was the great Shakespearean production known as "Caliban," produced at the City College Stadium, several weeks ago. Other important features of the out-of-door amusements were the great May-day parties, and the singing of religious and patriotic songs by thousands of people who gathered in Central Park. The European folk customs have been stimulated this year, and they have not only helped to furnish enjoyment for a part of the city population, have served to preserve and popularize this class of entertainments in the United States. When the open-air drama was furnished it proved so popular that the Grand Opera remained as the only feature needed to complete the triumphs of the year's out-of-door performances. "Die Walkure," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" were witnessed by audiences of nearly 10,000 people who pronounced the open air operas charmingly successful. The regular Metropolitan orchestra was used, and Madame Galski, Luca Botta, Emma Bornigaglia and many other Metropolitan stars helped to produce the operas.

Trust Question Up Again. During the investigation of the so-called "money trust" several years ago, there was an endless amount of inquiry into interlocking directors, and the Stanley Investigating Committee became famous through its investigation of Carnegie, Rockefeller, Morgan, Baker, Schwab, and other prominent capitalists and financiers.

lected company of screen artists in its portrayal. Whatever one's temporal state of mind may be, the enjoyment of a well acted, beautifully photographed and appropriately costumed photoplay set in the glorious scenery of "God's great out-of-doors," may be depended upon to bring real happiness in the refreshing entertainment immediately forthcoming. Bluebird Photoplays aim to fulfill the expectations of those who accept the blue bird as a harbinger of happiness.

SHERRY'S

"Bluebirds for Happiness," is an expression that finds realization in "The Girl of Lost Lake," the Bluebird Photoplay to be exhibited at the Sherry theatre today and tomorrow with Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Fred Church leading an especially se-

The evils which it was thought were clearly brought out at that time were carefully considered in the creating of the new federal banking law. That these interlocking directors interfered with the general public, appears to have been sustained by the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board, which has just taken action upon 679 applications of directors of national banks throughout the country. The Board has rejected 123 directors. In the New York district 134 applications were granted and 48 denied. The Board explains that it has considered each case on its merit, but has taken the general position that the mere purchase by two banks of commercial paper in the open market or the making of time or demand loans on collateral securities having a wide market, or the purchasing of such securities, need not necessarily or invariably be considered as indicating "substantial competition" within the meaning of the law. The Reserve Board aims to promote competition, and to prevent directors through their connections with financial institutions from withholding or influencing credit in the local or general loan market. The Reserve Board proceeds on the theory that, as a rule, it is impractical for the same director to serve in institutions which are naturally engaged in competition.

Merchants Advance Business. The retail merchants of the country have recently held a big convention, at which every phase of merchandising has been discussed. How to put merchandising on a higher plane of efficiency, correct trade abuses, and improve the quality of the goods generally, have been problems of trade that have been given serious consideration. One of the principal speakers told the retail dealers, "if you are going to make profits you have got to mark your prices in accordance with market conditions. What you were able to sell at 25, 35, or 50 cents or $1 a year ago you cannot profitably sell at such figures now. It looks as if some time must elapse before we get back—if we ever do—to old, standard prices." Consideration was given to the condition whereby some merchants make a practice of cutting down on quality in order to avoid placing higher prices on their goods. The merchants were agreed that the public is more insistent than ever before on receiving reliable merchandise. At their gatherings it was declared that the trash which sold so readily fifteen or twenty years ago cannot any longer be forced upon the buying public.

Expensive Movies Pay. That the public is willing to pay liberal prices to see first-class moving picture shows has been demonstrated by the marvelous success of Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization," which is now in its fourth month, and still playing to crowded houses. The daring Mr. Ince put this peace picture on Broadway at a time when the whole country was apparently blood-thirsty to get into a war in Europe, Mexico, or mostly anywhere else. The film "Civilization" has all of the big qualities that in the drama have served to create higher ideals, and benefit the public mind. It is one of the most marvelous productions ever shown on the screen, and is one of the very few big moving picture productions that has proven to be a genuine Broadway success.

Search Light is Wonder. The new Sperry search light, said to be the most powerful in the world, has been attracting a good deal of attention on the water front. The light has been placed on top of a Brooklyn building, and it has a radiating surface of nine feet in diameter. The candle power is 1,280,000,000, and the man who operates it declares that he can see distinctly fifteen miles away. It is also claimed that people nearly fifty miles from New York are able to discover the presence of the light. According to the operators of the great search light, a beam near its source is of such intensity that a pile of rubbish 200 feet away has been set on fire by its rays. Its power is described as so great that "mounted near sea level, it can outline a ship as soon as it appears on the horizon."
