Second String Teams Will Play Saturday

Baker Will Send Squad to La Grande for What Promises To Be a Battle Royal Between Recruits of Both Schools.

La Grande will see another ball game next Saturday. Baker's second string team comes to La Grande to meet the second string of this city. Because the first team and substitutes go to Wallowa that day, practically every member of the "rook" squad will be called into service to combat the Baker team. Captain Huff of the "second raters" realizes a terrific fight lies before his team, but he is going out to win. A return match will be played in Baker later.

OREGON PROTEST WITHHELD

U. of O. Will Play Parsons and Won't Object to Miller, Hunt, Spiel
Eugene, Nov. 1.—(United Press)—Graduate Manager Tiffany expects a crowd of 8000 at the Oregon-Washington game Saturday. He announced Oregon won't protest the game should Washington play Miller, Spiel and Hunt. All are declared ineligible. Oregon has determined to use John Parsons, despite Washington's protests.

CHAMBERLAIN IS HEARD.

ment and has access to the records, we must assume that he has uttered a deliberate falsehood," said the senator. He then went on to tell of the circumstances leading up to the passage of the law. Six hundred men of the brotherhoods had come to Washington to confer with the railway managers. They were asking for an eight hour day with time and a half for overtime. They expressed a willingness to arbitrate this point but the railroads insisted upon arbitrating all the concessions granted to their employees in the past 25 years. This the brotherhoods refused to do, taking the position that they should not arbitrate privileges to which they already had title.

The Deadlock Broken.

The two sides were deadlocked and they left Washington. The strike had been called for Sept. 4 by referendum vote of the brotherhood unions. President Wilson saw that 100,000,000 people of the nation, directly interested in the outcome, had not had representation. There was no law to compel arbitration or mediation but the president thought the great power of his office might bring some solution. He called the 600 representatives to Washington and discussed with them their stand. He then called the railway managers and heard their contentions. He tried to suggest grounds upon which they could get together but both sides were obdurate. The men left Washington again, both sides to prepare for the strike.

Wilson Appeals to Congress.

It was not until then, the senator said, that Wilson decided to appeal to congress for help. He called the steering committee of the senate together of which Senator Chamberlain is a member and outlined the situation. The Adamson bill was the result, and he called attention to the fact that over sixty Republicans, among them Joe Cannon, voted for the passage of the bill. The brotherhoods never even asked legislation, he said, it being contrary to their policy.

Effect of Strike.

He briefly described the effects of such a strike, had it been called. A five day strike, he said, would have meant the starvation of babies in large cities where the milk supply is dependent upon daily trains. It would have also cut off the food supply of the cities and would have stopped payrolls. It would have meant absolute destruction to the perishable fruit crops of the whole nation.

Had the strike been called, he said, the same men who are now criticizing the Adamson law would have charged up to the president all the death, misery, and destruction which would have resulted.

He discussed what he termed Hughes' rapid shifts in his public references to the law. At first, he said, Hughes criticized the law because it gave the laborers eight hours but changed when a number of big factories announced their immediate intention of putting the eight hour day into effect. Then Hughes declared he favored the principle but was opposed to the method.

Senator Chamberlain also discussed briefly the child labor law and other constructive acts of the administration and directed attention to Hughes' Milwaukee speech in which he said some of the Wilson laws must be repealed for the good of the country. He predicted that, if Hughes were elected, he would not dare to repeal any one of them. To do so would insure a one-term tenure, he said.

Wilson's Foreign Policy.

In touching upon the foreign and Mexican policy of Wilson, the senator pointed out how Washington had been burned in effigy because he refused to embroil the country in a controversy with France and England, how Lincoln was abused and lampooned because he used the diplomatic rather than the military arm of the government in controversies with England and Mexico, and of how Taft gained universal praise from those now assailing Wilson because he followed the same course with reference to Mexico that Wilson has.

The Mexican Situation.

"They say that a thousand men have been killed in Mexico," he said, "but if we had gone down there with our army and navy, many times a thousand of your boys, husbands and brothers would have been sacrificed in the interests of mine owners and capitalists howling for intervention. And I am sure that those women who sent out the 'Golden Special' would not have been the first to offer up their sons."

Senator George F. Chamberlain, in his address last night, discussed the imports of lumber from Canada to the United States during the period starting with the Taft administration and closing with the first ten months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. He based the figures quoted by him upon a letter written to Senator Lane under date of June 3, 1916, by E. E. Pratt, chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce at Washington.

The senator had quoted these figures at Dallas and Marshallfield, and had been subjected to an attack by the Oregonian which said, in an article printed Monday, that the senator had misstated the facts. Professor Pratt's letter, in stating the figures, wrote in terms of one thousand board feet, which fact was brought out by the senator in his reference to the let-
