WAR MAKES MANY CHANGES

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)
Imperial Headquarters, Russian Army, Oct. 5.—(By Mail.)—Sunday at the Stavka, or Grand General Headquarters, would make the most keenly imaginative man in the world forget there was ever such a thing as war even if he had not done so already in this quietest and most peaceful of towns.

Sunday—our Sunday—is Monday here, and market day. Our Saturday is their Sunday. All Saturday you have heard the rapid peal of bells chiming in several keys from calcimined towers flecked with resting crows, and have attended the most beautiful religious services in the world where boy-choirs on opposing sides of the high altar chanted the gorgeous ceremonies.

So today business is going full blast and the wonderful open air markets near the water tower are packed with its people as curiously mixed, as the wares one finds on sale. The tone is purely Oriental, and not even the electric sirens of American automobiles whose terrifying shrieks penetrate here can wrench from one's mind all of this effect.

Here in this market are people who scarcely realize a war is being fought or that Russia is playing a leading part. The crowd is made up of peasants, mostly, and the poor of the town whose mart this essentially is. The peasants have driven into town with things to sell or exchange.

The poor of the town have come to lay in a supply of those things of which they stand in need. Gardarmen in considerable number keep order and these, in khaki uniforms, lend what little of the Occident there may be to the scene.

The men generally wear clothes made of a coarse white, bagging-like material, sometimes wearing a coat cut like the old fashioned box overcoats, or simply a tunic resembling a shirt and belted in at the waist. On their feet are sandals made of bark-lining very crudely woven, while about their legs are rags—of the same material as their other garments, bound on by strings which criss-cross up from the sandals, which in reality they tied, to the feet. Occasionally some man has a coat made of white felt, like the coarse, pliable felt used for linings. Hats of this material are seen but caps are the principal form of headgear for males.

The women move about like rain-bows. Their dresses are all the colors and shades imaginable, like gypsies in a musical comedy. No such thing as a hat or bonnet is ever seen here, in the market. Some wear shawls the like of which Ellis Island, off New York, has seen many, some wear handkerchiefs of vivid pattern while still others wear a sort of turban made of a special shawl, or large handkerchief, and skillfully bound about the head.

Some of the women are barefooted, similar to those adopted by the man. The stalls are lined up against the sidewalks but facing the middle of the street down which the crowd surges and mingles. Then there are perambulating merchants, with baskets on their arms, or trays supported, Yiddish fashion, in front of them.

One can buy almost anything here. As I strolled down the center of the thoroughfare I noted bread, white and black; dried mushrooms, strung like dried apples of a string; cucumbers, watermelons, beets, onions, squashes, cabbages, sun-flower seed, tomatoes, cauliflowers, pears, apples, pretzels, sweetcakes, candy, soda water, eggs, chickens, live pigeons, sausages, the poorer cuts of meats, ham bones from which the meat has been cut away, the remaining dry as mummies; string beans and other things for the table.

Then one could buy any and all sorts of cheap garments aprons, mother hubbards, handkerchiefs and head dresses, coarse socks and stockings, leg-clothes and sandals; also wooden spoons such as peasant use; china doll heads with curious faces; wooden dolls pad licks, whips leather straps, peaked white felt hats of the same material as the coats; native toys made of wood bead necklaces and other trinkets too numerous to mention further.

There were many children around. They sat with their mothers looking idly on, played with their strange dolls, ate black bread and drank kvass as suited them, the boys dodging in and out playing games and teasing the little girls as do boys the world over.

It would seem, almost, as if the world had gotten used to its war and forgotten it entirely.

An Old Man's Stomach.

As we grow older and less active, less and less food is required to meet the demands of our bodies. If too much is habitually taken, the stomach will rebel. When a man reaches the advanced age of 85 or 90, you will find that he is a light eater. Be as careful as you will, however, you will occasionally eat more than you should and will feel the need of Chamberlain's Tablets to correct the disorder. These tablets do not contain pepsin, but strengthen the stomach and enable it to perform its functions naturally. They also cause a gentle movement of the bowels.—Adv.

State C. E. President Coming.

Mr. Carrick, president of the State Christian Endeavor union, will be in La Grande tonight, to meet with a committee on the Christian Endeavor conference, which will be held here sometime next February. This conference will include the Eastern Oregon district.

Last Saturday, Mr. Carrick was in La Grande, at which time a banquet was given for him at the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Carrick gave a very interesting talk on the Christian Endeavor work. The meeting tomorrow night, will be very instructive and helpful, as he will at that time explain the Christian Endeavor Pledge. The meeting will be held at the Christian church and all members of both the Presbyterian and Christian societies and their friends are invited to attend.

Mrs. P. O. Stuchell Tells How She Cured Her Son of a Cold.

"When my son Ellis was sick with a cold last winter I gave him Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It helped him at once and quickly broke up his cold," writes Mrs. P. O. Stuchell, Homer City, Pa. This remedy has been in use for many years. Its good qualities have been fully proven by many thousands of people. It is pleasant and safe to take.—Adv.

Puts $25,000 Under Pillow; Thief Gets It.

Baldwin, Miss., Nov. 8.—(Special)—Archibold Hopper's fear that the bell weevil would ruin the cotton crop of his plantation cost him $25,000 today. Last night he closed the deal whereby the plantation was sold for that amount in cash. He took the money home and placed it under his pillow. Today the money is gone and Hopper still is suffering from the effects of a drug, given him by the robber.

Worms Sap Your Child's Strength

Is your child pale and fretful? Does he cry out in sleep or grind his teeth? These symptoms may mean worms and you should obtain relief at once. Kickapoo Worm Killer is a pleasant remedy that kills the worm, and by its mildly laxative quality expels it from the system. Worms sap the vitality and make your child more susceptible to other ailments. Your druggist sells Kickapoo Worm Killer, 25c a box.—Adv.

Certain Cure for Croup.

Mrs. Rose Middleton, of Greenville, Ill., has had experience in the treatment of this disease. She says, "When my children were small my son had croup frequently. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy always broke up these attacks immediately, and I have never without it in the house. I have taken it myself for coughs and colds with good results."—Adv.

When your hands and face chap from the cold winds and Fall weather you can easily remedy it with Silverthorn's cold cream. Price 25c and 50c.—Adv. 11-6-16.
