Adamson Law Hearing In Supreme Court

Whether the People of the United States Will Face Another Railroad Crisis Depends Upon Result of Present Case.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—(United Press)—Whether the people of the United States again will face a national railroad strike crisis depends on the supreme court's decision as to the law's constitutionality, argument of which is being made before that tribunal here today.

The governmental and industrial crisis of which this law is the outgrowth is looked upon by leaders as a concrete showdown between the powers of labor and those of capital. The measure was rushed through congress last summer by President Wilson to ward off a strike of 400,000 railroad workers that would have tied up transportation in this country and gave promise of leading to conditions verging on civil war. This strike menace has not yet been averted.

At the top of the calendar of the United States supreme court today was the case—No. 97; Frances M. Wilson, United States attorney for the western district of Missouri, versus Alexander New and Henry C. Ferris, receivers of the Missouri, Oklahoma & Gulf railroad. Solicitor General Davis acted for the government.

Argument of the Adamson case was begun after the court handed down its opinions for the day—Monday being decision day in the court. There was little room for spectators in the tiny supreme court chamber. Attorneys were anxious for legal reasons as well as out of curiosity to hear pleas of the array of lawyers appearing in the case for railroads and the government.

In the first fight before the court, railroad executives had the advantage of a favorable decision in the court below, when Judge Hook, at Kansas City, declared the law, after a brief hearing, unconstitutional. That, however, was only preliminary. In today's battle the supreme court will decide for all time whether congress had the power to legislate wages, providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for railroad men, and that for work after that they shall be paid overtime premiums.

What time will be taken by the court after today to decide the case no one knows.

WOMAN STATES ATTORNEY TO BATTLE LEGISLATURE

Denver, Colo., Jan. 8.—(United Press)—Miss Clara Ruth Mozzer, the only woman assistant state's attorney general in the United States, appointed to the position in response to the demands of the women of this state, today started her campaign to force the Democratic party up to its pledges and put through a minimum wage law for women at the present session of the state legislature. The bill passed by the last legislature and vetoed by the governor will be amended and reintroduced at this session. The most important changes in the bill, which is patterned after the Oregon law, will be the inclusion of piece workers as well as wage workers in the minimum, according to Miss Mozzer. If the bill passes, all cases coming under the new law while she holds office will be turned over to Miss Mozzer.

MRS. WILSON NOW HAS LAST WORD ON WHO SHALL BE THE GUESTS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—(United Press)—Mrs. Wilson today is the ultimate authority on all invitations to White House social functions. For the first time in years, management of these events has been transferred from the executive offices to the mansion proper. As a result, the number of invited guests to the state events has fallen off between fifty and sixty per cent.

Incidentally the new regime has brought joy and peace to the minds of assistant secretaries in the business wing of the White House. In the past, the functions given by the president have been attended about equally by those on the regular White House lists and by those who request special invitations. Each reception is preceded by letters and phone calls from senators, congressmen and others, appealing in behalf of themselves or others, for precious cards of admission. Now it's all changed. The assistants merely refer those asking invitations, directly to Mrs. Wilson or her secretary, Miss Edith Beha. Hence the big reduction in guests, noted for the first time at the judicial reception.
