"The Measure of a Man"

"You are not fitted for the ministry, Fairmeadow," said the dean of the theological school as he held the door open for the intemperate and habitually discordant young man to pass out. Fairmeadow, humiliated, started west instanter and rode to the end of the line. When he descended from the train in a lumber camp he was hailed as the living answer to Pattie's prayer that a parson should be sent to give the body of her father Christian burial. Thus it was that Fairmeadow became the spiritual guide of the lumbermen, and gained, by his aggressive tactics, the soubriquet of "The Fighting Parson."
See J. Warren Kerrigan as "The Fighting Parson" at Sherry's theater today, when he will appear, with Louise Lovely, in "The Measure of a Man," done in Bluebird Photoplays. In this role Kerrigan has a type exactly fitting him; he acts with vigor but with respectful consideration for the part he plays. Miss Lovely is well suited in the role of the mountain girl who inspired the "parson" to win his own battles and at the same time benefit his neighbors by his precepts and his example. "The Measure of a Man" is an unusual photoplay admirably acted and produced.

Easily Settled.
"Be easy," said a rich merchant to a fault-finding son-in-law, who was perpetually pestering him with complaints of his wife's shortcomings. "As her behavior is so intolerable, I will alter my will and cut her off with a shilling." The old man heard no more of his daughter's failings.
