THE LEGISLATURE.

The legislature has adjourned, and it is too early to pass judgment on its work. There will be those who will condemn everything that the legislature has done. There will be hasty critics who for purposes of demagoguery will discover "daylight" resolutions as well as "midnight" resolutions. Such natures love to vilify and condemn. Everybody to them is just a little bit queer. Such natures are warped. They see no good in anything, no sermons in stones or songs in the running brooks. The legislators may expect abuse and vilification from such. Men in public may expect that.

One has only to read the life of George Washington to learn what even such a great patriot suffered from the abuse of newspapers and the public. When Washington was taking a fond and affectionate farewell from the officers of his army, there was organized for the purpose of commemorating the great deeds of the soldiers of the revolution the society of Cincinnati, to which officers and their descendants were eligible. Washington was elected president. Even though Washington had just triumphantly finished the revolution, a great howl rose up that he and the officers were attempting to found an aristocracy, that they were looking toward a monarchy. This in spite of the fact that Washington had been tendered the crown and like Caesar had thrice spurned it.

In Washington's administration as president, he was bitterly assailed by the faction that favored the United States engaging in war on the side of France against Great Britain. Washington foresaw that the true policy for the United States to pursue and the same holds good today—was to hold aloof from entangling foreign alliances, to provide a haven of liberty on this continent that would be open to all the citizens of the world. For this Washington was denounced as a traitor.

A public servant, a public man of any kind, must do his duty serenely without hope of praise or reward. As to the present legislature, we imagine it was no better or no worse than many others, probably better. We doubt whether there was graft in this legislature.

We believe that Speaker Stanfield and President Moser made good records. We believe that the average legislator was conscientious. If, as is reported, the legislature has kept within the six per cent limitation and provided enough funds to carry on our varied form of state government with all its commissions, inspectors, and horde of state officials—we believe it is entitled to credit and praise.

Now, all together, and boost for La Grande's Automobile Show, March 15, 16, and 17.

The Neighborhood Club is to be congratulated on bringing Mr. William Finley, state biologist to La Grande. His lecture and moving pictures were an educational treat.

Two American ships are leaving for London to enter the barred zone. Sooner or later the question of submarining will come to a show down.
