Zoraida played with the hearts of men as lightly as though they were pawns in her favorite game of chess. Ivan was sent to war by his father, that the elder man might have free field in Zoraida's affections. Sure of himself, with Ivan out of the way, the old man introduced to the fair wretch, his young friend Marquis De Chantal. Immediately Zoraida fawned upon the rich Marquis. The old man in vengeance prepared a poisoned cup for his rival—but Zoraida changed the goblets and the poisoner was poisoned. Then the Marquis held sway until Ivan returned, unexpectedly, from the trenches. Back to her first love Zoraida switched—but the Marquis would not be so easily disposed of. He challenged Ivan to sword combat, and Ivan thought he had killed his adversary. But the Marquis was only wounded—fatally to be sure—but he lived long enough to entrap Ivan and Zoraida in an air-tight tomb he had prepared for them—and then the Marquis died. Bluebird Photoplays tell this tragic story in a beautiful Rex Ingram production, captioned "Black Orchids," which will be the attraction at the Sherry theater today only with the beautiful and talented Cleo Madison playing the role of Zoraida—the flirt who flirted with just one too many men and then paid the penalty for a life of fickleness.
