Men Were Killed at Dance in Hot Lake 34 Years Ago Today

BY ED L. ECKLEY

A tragedy which was followed by the death of four persons was enacted at a Washington's birthday dance in Hot Lake in 1883. The lake property at that time belonged to S. F. Newhard, now of Portland, and there was a frame hotel building of two stories with a hall above, and a kitchen, dining room and bath rooms below.

On S. Valentine's night of that year Mr. Newhard gave a ball which was attended by a number of young men from Union and the Pyle canyon district who came without "partners," and they were on this account snubbed by some of the young men in attendance from the Ladd Canyon district, then locally known as "Tar Flat." Among the latter was a ranch hand who had been in the neighborhood but a few months and whose name was William Gabriel, and another young man named Frank Cotner.

A Washington's birthday dance was announced by Mr. Newhard and it was openly proclaimed by the leaders of the two factions that it would be seen "who would run the next dance," or some remarks of similar purport.

It was the universal custom in those days to take whiskey to dances. A party of four young men left Union for Hot Lake the night of the dance. In the party were Charles Baird, Henry Green, Clay Miller and Temple Garne. Before leaving the front of Billy Wilson's saloon one of them was so indiscreet as to say that they intended to "have a Tar Flatter for breakfast." A similar remark is said to have been made when they arrived at Hot Lake. All parties, however, seemed to have had a sense of the gravity of the situation and the dance proceeded without disorder of any kind. By an accident the boys from Union and the boys from Ladd Canyon had cached their bottles of whiskey in the same bath room down stairs. At 11 o'clock, just before the supper was to have been served, Gabriel and Cotner invited R. W. (Fatty) King, the fiddler in charge, down to have a drink.

Charles Baird, who was looked upon as a sort of leader of the Union faction, was something of a violinist and was left to supply the music during King's absence. When the three entered the bath room they found that Miller, Green and Garner, of the Union contingent, were also in the bath room. There were no lights and one of the Ladd Canyon party demanded to know if the others had "taken all the whiskey." All were groping around in the dark, and one of the Union boys replied, "No; we'll show you," meaning that they had not disturbed the others bottles and with the words "We'll show you," he struck a match to convince them that everything was all right—at least that was the essence of the testimony adduced later. The striking of the match was construed to be the noise of a pistol, as was afterward affirmed, and either Gabriel or Cotner, or both, began firing. Miller was shot through the base of the brain and died instantly; Henry Green received a shot in the side of the face, and the bullet was extracted from the opposite side. He died from the effect of this wound about a year afterward. Garner came out of the melee unhurt.

Immediately after the shooting Gabriel and Cotner left the dance, not even taking time to exchange their dancing slippers for the heavier footwear they had brought with them. Cotner, however, got a pair of boots at his home and the two were tracked in the deep snow on the hills above Hot Lake. Capture was easily effected next day and Gabriel still had on his dancing slippers. On account of some previous remarks made in a bragadocio way by Gabriel, it was the belief at first he was alone responsible for the shooting. Cotner, however, was held as a witness and was later charged with also being a participant in the shooting.

He was allowed to give bonds which were furnished by O. P. Goodall and Charles McClure, both deceased. Goodall and McClure were friends and neighbors of Cotner's father and mother, an exemplary pair of old people to whom the sympathy of the bondsmen was enlisted on account of their trouble. Cotner went to Idaho where he was engaged in work and when suspicion began to deepen as to his part in the Hot Lake affair, Mr. Goodall went to Boise with the intention of having him surrender into custody. Walter Coffin, a prominent citizen of Boise, acting as deputy sheriff, went to a cabin where Cotner was staying. He had scarcely got the words from his lips as to his mission when Cotner shot him dead and escaped. Cotner has never been heard from directly to this day, although there have been rumors that he came back later under disguise to see his old father and mother. It is also said that he followed them when they returned to their former home in Texas and that from there he went into Mexico.

Gabriel was the only one of all who was brought to trial and he was sentenced to life imprisonment. He was consumptive and died not long after his incarceration in Salem.

It should be added in justice to Temple Garne that he was merely a spectator and was not directly connected with the feud. At last accounts he was living in Weiser, Idaho.

Five Americans Aboard Submerged Steamer

Washington, D. C., Feb. 22.—(United Press)—Consul Hurst, of Barcelona, reported that five Americans were aboard the Swedish steamer Skogland, which was submerged off the Spanish coast on February 18. She was enroute from Norfolk to Italy, carrying coal. The submarine allowed the crew ten minutes to enter the lifeboats.

PRIZE FIGHTERS GET LEAVE TO QUIT THE TRENCHES AND FIGHT WITH THEIR TWO FISTS

London, Feb. 2.—(United Press by Mail).—Prize-fighter soldiers expect to keep on fighting for side purses to augment the king's shilling, despite the complaints of less pugna-cious comrades. Jimmy Wilde, flyweight champ having at last joined the gymnastic staff, is hopeful of meeting upstarts just as the heavier boxers have done, thanks to the sportsmanship of their commanding officers.

"Professional fighters are often granted leave of absence to engage in fights when business men who gave up their enterprises are unable to obtain any liberty," wrote one irate soldier.

"In some regiments stationed near London it is a by-word to say you are a coming champion, to obtain leave."

Red Cross relief, however, has been largely furthered by the free services of various boxing champs. Hardly a week passes in London without some glove exhibition for charity's sake.

Sell It By The Want Ad Route

The Observer's little want ads do the work. It is surprising how many people turn to them every day and how quickly they meet the eye and bring buyer and seller together.

Look over your premises and see what you have to sell. A want ad describing it will hit the mark and turn something you do not need into cash.
