Baby Week Planned To Save Mothers From Death at Childbirth

Washington, March 22.—(United Press)—Plans to make Baby Week celebrations throughout the country this year from May 1 to May 6, a huge educational movement for the reduction of mortality among women at child-birth are under way at the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor today.

Baby Week celebrations in the past have been directed more towards reducing infant mortality. The fact, however, that 15,000 mothers are dying annually from conditions incident to child-birth has opened up an even greater problem, the Bureau announced. Ignorance and neglect are the prime causes for this high mortality. "Many women," one official at the Bureau said, "do not seem to realize how much their own health and the health of their children depends on the intelligent care of the mother before her baby is born. Baby week can help mothers in various ways and it will be made the starting point, this year, for certain concrete activities.

Plans now being completed, will include centers for mothers living in the country to gather and take prenatal educational work. The needs of rural mothers are less generally understood than those of city mothers and a rural nursing service is urged as one means of reducing the mortality rate in sections far removed from the city.

When A Man Is Most Efficient

In the April American Magazine Dean Erman Schneider says: "A man is most efficient when he is doing the work that gives him the greatest satisfaction. From the laborer to the business executive, every man should get three things out of work; a decent living; development and discipline, and satisfaction in the doing.

"If your job gives these to you give back to it the best work of your hand and brain. If it fail to give you these, face the fact that you are a misfit, and seek your appointed place. You have no right to let life remain separated from its two handmaids—liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Why "I Didn't Raise My Boy To Be A Soldier" was Successful.

E. M. Wickes has an article on popular songs in the April American Magazine in which he tells the history of a song that apparently has had its effect upon the foreign policy of this country.

"One well-known publisher turned down the biggest hit of 1915, 'I Didn't Raise My Boy To Be A Soldier.' Al Bryan, the author, thought of the idea one day while promenading the Boardwalk at Atlantic City. The chorus came to him in a flash and he took about thirty minutes to write the two verses.

"Coming back to New York, Bryan showed the song to his publisher, and it was turned down flat. Then a number of performers gave it a cold shoulder. But Bryan was still sure that his brain child had all the elements of success. He took it to Al Piantadosi, who wrote a melody for it, and the two induced Ed Morton to sing it at the Alhambra Theater one evening. Morton used it as a closing song, and it swept the crowd off its feet with one howl of approval. It took seven scores.

"The next day score of performers flocked down upon Bryan's publisher, thinking that he had issued it. He hadn't; but he started in to do so mighty quick. Before the song was five weeks old it had sold a half million copies. When it had sold about two hundred thousand more, and everybody concerned had his eyes fondly glued on the million mark, Will Dillon wrote a song entitled 'Don't Take My Darling Boy Away.' No sooner had this song been put on the market than the sales of Bryan's hit began to drop alarmingly. The public had evidently become confused by the two ideas; practically opposite.

"But suddenly from the retreat of Oyster Bay came Theodore Roosevelt, denouncing the song and its theme in a public speech. Newspaper editors all over the country took up the cudgels for or against the song. As a result every copy of the 'Soldier Boy' song stacked away in the Mausoleum of misfortune was snatched out and sold to a palpitant public. Do you wonder that song publishers get gray un-tilmely?"

MODART CORSETS Front Laced

Why Look Older Than You Are?

It is astonishing how many women through lack of attention are wearing corsets that give a more mature appearance to the figure than it should have and consequently they appear to be five or ten years older than they are.

It is possible to readily improve that condition if you will come to our corset department and get a trial fitting of the MODART front-laced corset.

See for yourself the youthful and graceful lines this famous corset will give you.

No expense to you—do not buy unless there is a decided improvement—then you should.
