How Miss Barrymore Decided to Wear Short Skirts, for First Time.

How Ethel Barrymore, Metro star, consented to wear short skirts for the first time in her career by appearing as an Asian dance-hall girl in "The White Raven," the magnificent Metro production which will be shown at the Sherry theatre, last showing today, forms an interesting story.

When the original story was written by Miss Barrymore by Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Edifice and Columbia studios, and discussed by Director George B. Baker, it met with Barrymore's approval. The strength of the story and its fine dramatic possibilities were instantly recognized by the star.

Several of the preliminary scenes had been made, when Mr. Baker began preparations for the biggest, involving a duplication of one of the most famous dance halls or "boiteaux" in the Klondike. His assistant, Charles Hunt, had obtained access to a valuable collection of photographs made in the Klondike at the time of the gold rush. A picture of a dance-hall character, showing her in knee-length skirts and other gaudy attire, was handed to Miss Barrymore with the request that she have her costume duplicate the one shown on the dance-hall habitue. Miss Barrymore gasped.

"But Mr. Baker, I have never appeared in short skirts on the stage in my life. I have refused to play roles that required them," she said.

"Miss Barrymore," replied Baker, "I would not ask anything but what would add to the dramatic values of the piece and to the strength of the role you play. I am sure you will always work for supreme results in your photoplays."

"Of course I will," smilingly returned the star. "I will go to the costume's room."

tackle. Nell is sent to the town with instructions to get the combination of that safe, no matter by what means she does so.

But after Nell has been in the town for some time, she falls in love with the cashier and cannot find it in her heart to betray his confidence in her. The members of the gang, meanwhile, are hounding her father for information concerning the girl and when he finally refuses to tell them anything, they kill him in their rage.

In escaping the consequence of their act, the culprits flee to the small town in which Nell is staying and attempt to force her to carry out their original design of robbing the bank, threatening to expose her to the man she loves if she does not do so. Nell is on the point of yielding when she reads in the paper of the murder of her father by the men who were supposed to be his own pals and in her wild fury at their treachery, she decides upon a plan of revenge that calls for the utmost skill and daring. That she is wounded in the fight which follows means nothing to her, for she is happy in avenging the "double crossing" of her father.

ARCADE

It is an old saying that there is honor even among thieves. In the peculiar code of the underworld the one great unforgivable crime is the double-crossing, or betrayal, of a pal. Around this fact there has been written a fascinating combination of comedy and drama called "A Girl Like That," a Famous Players-Paramount production in which Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore are co-stars. It is the attraction at the Arcade theatre today and tomorrow.

Nell Gordon is the daughter of the head of a gang of bank burglars who does not approve of her father's bizarre occupation but loves him so devotedly that she risks everything to be of service to him. When one of the members of the gang locates a bank in the country which he believes to be "rich picking," he attempts to cultivate the good graces of the cashier, but finding that he is unapproachable—and irreproachable—he informs old Gordon that it is a job for a girl to

The "Suffrage" social given by the Royal Neighbors of America, Cove camp No. 1752, at the I. O. O. F. hall Thursday evening, March 15, was well attended and the social a complete success. Distorted cartoons of the suffrage office seekers decorated the walls. The women dressed in light shirtwaists, dark skirts and men's coats and hats. They delivered the following program: Opening address, Mrs. H. E. Blevins; speech on "Woman's Rights," Mrs. Elmer Fulp; speech, "Turn About Is Fair Play," Mrs. Bert Pederman; vocal duet, "When the Women Rule," Mrs. Elmer Fulp and Miss Eva Roberts; song, "Ma Wants to Be President," by six girls; recitation, "Revised Version of the Vacant Chair," Miss Helma Anderson; closing address by Mrs. Nellie Martin. After the program the Woodmen, attired in long kitchen aprons, gave a broom, mop and baby parade about the hall bringing forth witty remarks and hearty laughter from the audience. Refreshments were served by the Woodmen in their female attire, the cartoons were disposed of by auction to the highest bidder, enriching the autoneers several dollars which with the admittance fee amounted to $26.78. To complete the fun of the evening the Woodmen swore out a warrant for the arrest of L. E. Anderson for printing the programs and assisting the suffragettes in various ways and a mock trial will be held at a later date.
