Care Of The Hen and Chicks

Washington, D. C. April 14.—(Special)—The proper brooding of chickens is one of the most difficult operations on many poultry farms, especially for the beginner. Many poultry keepers who are able to obtain good egg yields and fair hatches make a failure of brooding chickens, either in raising only a small percentage of the chickens hatched or in failing to rear strong, vigorous birds which develop into good breeding stock. Brooding is still in the experimental stage, and no one system has given perfect satisfaction. The poultry specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture advise the following procedure:

Setting hens should be confined to slightly darkened nests at hatching time and not disturbed unless they step on or pick their chickens when hatching, in which case the chickens should be removed as soon as dry, in a basket lined with flannel or some other warm material, and kept near a fire until all the eggs are hatched; or the eggs may be removed and placed under a quieter hen whose eggs are hatching at the same time. An incubator may also be used to keep the earliest hatched chickens warm, in case they are removed from the nest. If the eggs hatch unevenly, those which are slow in hatching may be placed under other hens, as hens often get restless after a part of the chickens are out, allowing the remaining eggs to become cooled at the very time when steady heat is necessary. Remove the egg shells and any eggs which have not hatched as soon as the hatching is over. Hens should be fed as soon as possible after the eggs are hatched, as feeding tends to keep them quiet; otherwise many hens will leave the nest. In most cases it is best that the hen remain on the nest and brood the chickens for at least 24 hours after the hatching is over. Powder the hen with a good insect powder before moving her and the chickens to the brood coop. The hen should be dusted every two weeks or as often as necessary until the chickens are weaned. If lice become thick on the chickens, or if they are troubled with "head lice," a very little grease, such as lard or vaseline, may be applied with the fingers on the head, neck, under the wings, and around the vent. Great care should be taken, however, not to get too much grease on the chickens, as it will stop their growth and in some cases may prove fatal. The brood coop should be cleaned at least once a week and kept free from mites. If mites are found in the coop, it should be thoroughly cleaned and sprayed with kerosene oil or crude petroleum. From 1 to 2 inches of sand or dry dirt or a thin layer of straw or fine hay should be spread on the floor of the coop. Brood coops should be moved weekly to fresh ground, preferably where there is new grass. Shade is very essential in rearing chickens, especially during warm weather; therefore, the coops should be placed in the shade whenever possible. A cornfield makes fine range for young chickens, as owing to cultivation of the ground, they get many bugs and worms and have fresh soil to run on most of the time and enjoy abundant shade. All the chickens should be toenailed or marked before they are transferred to the brooder or brood coop, so that their ages and breeding readily can be determined after they are matured. Farmers frequently keep old hens on their farms and kill the younger hens and pullets, because they are unable to distinguish between them after the pullets have matured.

Some Good Advice. Don't think too much of your own methods. Watch other people's ways and learn from them." This is good advice, especially when bilious or constipated. You will find many people who use Chamberlain's Tablets for these ailments with the best results, and will do well to follow their example.—Adv.

"The price of feed is high, but it must be admitted," says the Hermiton Herald, "some return is left for the farmer who can raise a 235-pound hog in nine months and all but 35 days of this time on alfalfa pasture. And when a farmer can raise a car of such hogs and get over $3000 for it, one is forced to believe there is money in hogs."

No merchant advertises just "for a showing." When a merchant uses valuable advertising space it means that he has something to say to you.—Adv. 4-9, 16, 23, 30tf.

Potatoes Have Dividends.

Potatoes offer attractive dividends, not only this year but other years, if handled with intelligent foresight.

Thus declares a readable and instructive bulletin on the producing and marketing side of the spud question, just published by the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway, Oregon Trunk and Oregon Electric companies' traffic department. The object of the booklet is educational. It is for free distribution to farmers and can be had upon application to agents of these lines or on postal card request to the general offices at Portland.

Present conditions combine to offer an unusual potato opportunity. There is a tremendous growing demand for foodstuff. Oregon potatoes, it is urged, are a resource worthy of the highest protection and care. The writer of the pamphlet, Lincoln W. Wheeler, who is well posted, estimates profits of from twenty-five to forty dollars per acre, from spuds, by studying improved cultural methods.

Countries which use potatoes as food eat far more spuds per person than the United States. High prices of spraying chemicals, scarcity and high prices of farm labor, as well as seed, together with the fact that several important potato producing sections elsewhere are more or less dependent on potash fertilizer upon which the war has put a prohibitive price, are among the factors which are discussed.

Potato growers will find valuable hints in this publication. High quality Oregon potatoes will be a valuable product this year, and it seems logical to expect them to bring an attractive price.

The system to follow in order to share in good prices for the product is not so much increasing the acreage as to use the same acreage with plantings of the best seed obtainable and to grow the crop under the best cultural method.

Exceptional high prices for potatoes one year encourages all sections of the country to increase their potato acreage the following year. The chances are they will not be willing to pay the price for growing the next crop.

A Potato Opportunity.

Different sections will be more or less affected by conditions causing the coming season's potato crop to be the most expensive grown in recent years. High prices of spraying chemicals, scarcity and high price of farm labor, some of the conditions. Several important sections are more or less dependent on potash fertilizer, and the war has put a prohibitive price on that commodity.

For the man who knows the potato business and has nerve the situation seems to offer an opportunity. Oregon potato growing is not a gambling proposition. There is absolutely no need for it to be.

Potato prices should be affected in a measure by the general tremendous demand for foodstuffs, and good prices rule, as potatoes are an exceptionally valuable food product and hard to substitute.

Potatoes are not a luxury. They are a food of the highest quality, so high in food value that, even at four dollars a hundred, they offer about as cheap a well-balanced part of a meal as one can get. The countries which use potatoes as food eat far more potatoes per person than ours.

That this country's per capita consumption should be so low is due to the lack of satisfaction with the quality of potatoes usually offered the consumer. A potato which cooks up mealy, possesses a delicious taste and an appetizing smell will always "pull" for a second helping at the table. Such a potato is very easily produced in Oregon, provided the grower will concede a fair ratio of the time and efforts comprising the farm management to the potato patch.

Why not graduate from a potato college? Be your own professor. Systematic headwork will graduate you with a Ph. D., which will mean to you Potatoes Have Dividends.
