United States National Bank

La Grande Oregon
Established Policy
The new big idea in banking is the recognition that banking is simply cooperation.
It maintains that a bank and its depositors are equally necessary to each other.
It influences a spirit that unifies endeavor—that makes the interests of both depositor and banker one—that results in mutual progress and advancement.
It is with the recognition that banking is cooperation that our Officers invite the confidence and patronage of the people of this community.

THE FORUM

THE CITY OF LA GRANDE.
BY CLARICE SNOW, 12 years)
La Grande is a small city, nestled among the pine clad hills of Eastern Oregon's Blue Mountains. The Grande Ronde river glides peacefully at the northern end, and, slipping away through the mountains, empties into the Snake river about one hundred miles distant from the city.
Many years ago, so the Indians tell us, lower La Grande and also Fruit Dale, a very fertile fruit region north of the city, was a lake. Gradually it dried up and left a plain about sixteen miles wide and twenty-five miles long. In the year 1805 Captains Lewis and Clark came through the valley and established the Oregon trail which may still be traced through the neighboring hills. A little later some settlers came, and finding this a good site for a town, built a fort, their homes and a few stores. Here, supplies which were freighted from the Umatilla landing on the Columbia river, could be obtained.
In the years 1892 and 1893 the O.-W. R. & N. railway was constructed through the valley north of these settlements which soon spread to the railroad. Now we have a population of about 8000.

The first brick building in the city was the National Bank but now most of the business buildings are of brick. In the town and on the farms are many stately residences and modern houses.
A very interesting place was the Blue Mountain University where many of the early citizens of La Grande received part of their education. This building was a two-story brick erected at the cost of $18,000 which was the free gift of the pioneers. It stood where the high school now stands. When it first opened it had about 160 students. Some of these, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Currey, Mr. Turner Oliver, Mrs. J. L. Williamson and Ed Reynolds are still living here.
As I said before, the city spread rapidly to the railroad, and, not stopping there, widened out until the northern end is about a mile from the depot. The main business section is on Adams avenue, Depot and Fir streets. There are about 50 or more important business buildings on these three streets.
Three more important places are the railroad yards, the Palmer mill and a plant of the Eastern Oregon Light and Power company. The railroad company employs 1765 men, and the mill about 200. About 2500 homes are lighted by the Light and Power company.

The valley around the city has a wonderfully fertile soil. Great quantities of wheat are raised, one acre of land yielding from 40 to 50 bushels. Carloads of white, whole wheat and graham flour are shipped out of here every year. Much fruit is also raised. One acre of trees will produce 1500 or 1600 boxes of apples. All sorts of vegetables are grown, the country ranking first in the state of Oregon in this production.
Another great attraction of La Grande is the beautiful scenery around it. It is entirely surrounded by dark blue mountains, the highest peak being Mt. Emily which is over 6000 feet. Another is Rooster peak, from the top of which many grand views of the valley may be obtained. One imagines himself gazing upon a vast checkerboard marked off by fields of different colors, such as green, gold and purple.
At the northern end by the river is a beautiful natural park. Among its trees and vines is a dancing pavilion, built in rustic style, where young and old spend many enjoyable evenings. Then there is an extensive playground for children supplied with the apparatus necessary for their amusement.
The city is proud of its library. On its shelves are 3000 volumes for the entertainment and education of the citizens of La Grande.

We are also proud of our schools which are four in number—three grade schools and a union high school. Altogether they contain 1424 students. Many outsiders are glad to take advantage of the good high school and some ride on horseback for miles, to attend. It is here that a business course is given. Courses in domestic science and manual training are given to the upper grades in the grade schools, as well as the high school.
We are looking forward to the time when La Grande will have the Eastern Oregon normal, which Pendleton tried so hard to secure but failed because of the bad location. When we consider the many attractions of La Grande we are sure that the plan will receive the hearty support of all.
