BUSINESS MEN'S LUNCHEON

tion opens. The place of honor in the parade can be given to young men of registration age. Other participants in the parade may be uniformed troops, if any; boy scouts, women's clubs, bands of music, school children, fire departments, such organizations as can turn out in sufficient numbers to make a showing, and citizens. Costumes, floats, and choruses will add to the spirit of the occasion. Everybody in the parade or among the on-lookers can be asked to carry or wear a flag. The spirit of the occasion should be one of joyous and uplifting idealism—a nation battling on behalf of the principle that "The world must be made safe for democracy."

The parade can start at 11 o'clock and place in its ranks made for those who have registered. Those who have not registered can be dropped out along the line in order that they may have an opportunity to register. Committees of men and women can be at every registration booth to pin an emblem on every man who registers. These emblems may be a bit of red, white, and blue ribbon drawn through the button hole, a small flag pinned to the coat lapel, or a specially designed button bearing words to the effect that the wearer has registered: "I am registered—are you?" Whatever device is chosen can be designated as official and as an evidence of duty performed.

At the close of registration there may be a grand rally, with speeches, songs and music. This could be held in an auditorium or theater if rainy, or in front of the court house, town hall, or in an easily accessible park if the weather is clear. This rally is for the purpose of doing honor to those who have registered. They are our defenders and all honor should be shown them. There can be talks by the leaders who best represent the community, and all talks made to sound the high note of patriotism.

For days prior to Registration Day the newspapers can carry news items of the appointment, meetings and action of committees and editorials urging a record registration. Special window decorations, window cards, and bill boards can be used to arouse enthusiasm in the event. Teachers can talk to their pupils and ministers to their congregations. It is suggested that local Chambers might advertise the event through the courtesy of large local newspaper advertisers willing to contribute advertising space ordinarily reserved for private display. Suitable placards can be placed on automobiles, trolley cars, delivery wagons, bicycles, and other available vehicles. As this movement is to assure a registration which it is hoped will break all records no effort should be made to draw people from other communities. Each community should put on its own program and confine the celebration to its own people.

Chairman Selders announced that there would be a meeting of the Grande Ronde Chautauqua in the postoffice building at 7:30 this evening.

Secretary King of the "Y" made a motion that a resolution of sympathy be sent to the family of Claud Haisten from the business men which was adopted. Mr. King, Rev. G. L. Clark and Ed Kiddle were appointed to draw up these resolutions.

The rest of the meeting was given over to Ben. Worsley who called to the attention of the business men present, why every man and woman wants good roads. Mr. Worsley said every man and woman in Oregon wants good roads, but how to get them is the question; that will be decided on June 4th. "What are we getting now?" he asked. "During the past 10 years we have spent huge sums of money. We have literally nothing to show for it. Shall we go on wasting money or shall we concentrate our expenditure on the most important roads and when they are made, pass on to the next in importance and so on?"

He says we stand now just where we did five years ago. He said that business men and farmers of the commonwealth should wake up and commencing June 4 put Oregon on level of any state in the Union by new money, new life, new blood and start us on the road of development that leads to success.

Mr. Worsley gave a clear explanation of good roads from beginning to end and concluded with an appeal to the business men of the city that they get together and boost as one. "And lift Oregon out of the mud, on June 4th."

U. G. Couch will act as chairman at next luncheon.
