INTELLIGENT people have a way of sizing things up for themselves—W-B CUT is all shreds, all tobacco; and ordinary plug is leaf with a lot of heavy, gummy sweetening, holding it together. But everything doesn't go by quantity either; W-B CUT is a rich, sappy chew, because it's rich, sappy tobacco. It doesn't take so much W-B to satisfy. Take a small chew. Then notice how it lasts.

Home Cookery

Pork Shank With Beans.
Select a shank with a nice piece of meat on it and chop in pieces. Put in a kettle and cover with boiling water. Drain at once and then add enough water to keep from scorching. Season with salt and red pepper and cook gently. Have ready a quart of beans parboiled and add these to the shank, taking care not to scorch. Turn the meat often and add more water as needed. When done the meat should be dropping from the bones and the beans mushy, with very little liquid in the kettle.

China Chili With Rice.
Simmer together for half an hour two tablespoonfuls of butter, half a can of French peas, a small blade of mace, one pint of rich brown gravy and salt and pepper to taste. Then remove the mace, add one pint of diced cooked mutton, one small head of lettuce torn into shreds and simmer for fifteen minutes longer. Serve heaped in the center of a chop platter and surround with a border of steamed rice.

Escaloped Cheese.
Put a layer of breadcrumbs in the bottom of a greased baking dish, then a layer of soft crumbled cheese and proceed until the dish is nearly full. Heat a cupful of milk and add a beaten egg, a level tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste. Pour over cheese and bread and bake for twenty minutes.

Browned Macaroni.
Stew some noodles or macaroni in salt water until tender and drain. Have a tablespoonful of butter browning in the skillet, add some fine bread or cracker crumbs, a small handful of either will be about right, and when brown stir in the noodles and serve.

Tomato Patties.
A pint of tomatoes, enough cracker crumbs to thicken the liquid, add a beaten egg, pinch of salt and pepper and half a cupful of flour. Form into patties, roll in cracker crumbs and fry. Serve on lettuce leaf.

Good Kitchen Floors Conducive to Health

The rapidly growing science of bacteriology is teaching the housewife that diseases are lurking not only in contaminated food and dirty wash rags, but in the cracks and joints of the poorly constructed kitchen floor, asserts Dr. J. D. Walters, professor of architecture in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

A properly constructed kitchen floor is made either of narrow, vertical grained, kiln dried hard pine—southern yellow pine—hard maple, red oak or white oak.

Flooring lumber is only from a half to seven-eighths of an inch in thickness, but a good kitchen floor is usually laid on a construction floor of stock boards and underlaid by two or three thicknesses of tar paper. Tar paper is better than any other kind because it retains its pungent odor almost indefinitely and thus prevents insects from eating into the wood.

The finishing floor is laid after the plastering of the house has been completed. The floor is then planed down with a floor planer and given a coat of hot linseed oil applied freely with a mop, so that the floor will absorb much of the oil.

The finishing coat of the average kitchen floor consists of a strong coat of shellac dissolved in methyl alcohol. Shellac varnish will stand much more wear without showing spots than the usual varnishes. Considerable time, at least two weeks, should pass between the oiling and shellacing process.
