Joseph, May 29.—(Special)—A big game is being played in Joseph. The two opposing teams are Rain vs. Shine and the score for the last four days is Rain 3, Shine 1. But we still have hopes.
J. R. Morgan, of Oakesdale, Washington, is here visiting his brother M. W. Morgan. It is reported that J. R. Morgan will buy his brother's jewelry store in the near future.

The home of L. E. Caviness was the scene of two very delightful Bridge parties on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. The color scheme for both days was red, white and blue. On Monday evening a meeting of the Joseph Community War Relief Committee was held in the city hall. A permanent organization was affected and the following officials elected: Geo. Dawson, president; Hugh Wilson, vice president; W. G. Beith, secretary; F. F. McCully, treasurer.
On Saturday night a farewell party was given to Misses Helen and Genevieve Howell by Miss Grace Caviness at the Caviness home. Games and

Poor Sir Walter Raleigh
Too bad he had only his cloak to spræad in the mud for the dainty feet of Good Queen Bes to tread on
If he could have used a WHITTALL ANGLO-PERSIAN rug instead she would have been so much pleased with his gal-lantry that perhaps he never would have been sentenced to death.
Speaking of gallantry—well, of course, we cannot compete with Sir Walter, but there's this much to it—we spread our WHITTALL RUG FOR EVERYONE TO WALK ON.
It is on the sidewalk now—and will stay there 10 days. It's worth seeing.
This sidewalk test is giving us some interesting and convinc-ing statistics on the weaving qualities of WHITTALL RUGS which we will publish later.

Mother's Doll Story
The Ready Soldier
There was once upon a time a little boy who had a brave rag doll of a soldier boy.
He wore a handsome uniform of drab with brass buttons down the front of his jacket and nice puttees over his tan shoes. Of course he had a red cord around his hat, and when he marched he always carried a gun.
"Drill here," said the rag doll soldier to the little boy.
So the little boy put on his scout uniform and took his wooden gun over his shoulder. And off they both marched to a level spot back of the barn, where nobody could watch them drill.
"Right about face!" shouted the rag doll soldier. And the little boy right about faced.
Just then great big raindrops began to fall, and the little boy would surely have had his scout things all shrunk up if the rag doll soldier hadn't happened to have his umbrella with him.
"A soldier is always prepared," said he, opening the umbrella and holding it over his friend.
Game of Midnight.
One player is fox and the others sheep. The fox may only catch the sheep at midnight. The fox stands in one corner of the yard inside of a marked off space. The sheep are in a diagonally opposite corner. The fox leaves his den and wanders about, after which the sheep scatter out and come as close to him as they dare. They keep asking him the time, and he answers any hour he chooses. If he says any hour except "midnight" they are safe. But when he answers "Midnight," they must run for the sheepfold. Any sheep caught changes place with the fox and the game goes on.
Blind Bell.
All players but one are blindfolded and scattered about. The one who is not blindfolded carries a bell in one hand, so that it will ring with every step. The blindfolded try to catch the one with the bell, who will have to use alertness to keep out of the way. Whoever catches the bellman changes places with him.
