Just Experiences Angling In Catherine Creek

(Hon. W. T. Wright, of Union, Oregon, is one of the most enthusiastic sportsmen of the state. He has fished Catherine Creek for the last 50 years. He was engaged in the general merchandise business at Union from 1865 to about 1882, when he organized the First National Bank of Union, being the president of that institution until his retirement from active business some two or three years since. The following article by him was printed in the Oregon Sportsman.)

Probably no stream of its size in the State of Oregon, has afforded more sport, to more people, with more bountiful returns, for more than fifty years, than Catherine Creek; the stream running through the City of Union, famous locally as the Stock Show town.

It is a stream of considerable size, and never-falling flow—furnishing power to the Union Flouring Mills; water for an extensive irrigation system covering several thousand acres; and the supply of the city water works of Union, a plant with sufficient capacity for a city of 12,000 people. Its source is in the Blue Mountains lying southeast of Grande Ronde Valley, and its several forks originate on the divides of Eagle River and the various forks of Eagle River and the Great Minam divide. It coalesces into one main stream several miles above Union—its course—as well as those of its various branches, being through deep, fairly well timbered canyons. The waters are clear, cold, and pure, identical with all the waters originating in the snows and springs of the high mountains, and including the famous waters of Bull Run—Portland's unrivalled supply. Incidentally, the first water power flouring mill of eastern Oregon—east of The Dalles, was erected in Union on the banks of Catherine Creek in 1865 by the late George Wright and his son, the writer. We came to Union under contract with D. S. Baker, father of Walla Walla, builder of its first railroad—and A. H. Reynolds, the pioneer flouring mill man—to erect and put in operation a flouring mill at Union, being then an important supply point on the road to the Idaho and eastern Oregon mines. The mill was completed and put in operation in the fall of 1865. We operated a general merchandise business also, which together with the superintendency of the mills during the construction required all the writer's time until well along in the season.

Meanwhile Catherine Creek, the lovely, the beautiful, went dancing and smiling by, singing, beckoning in the most entrancing way, and inviting to the joys to be taken without asking, hidden in her sparkling waters. Morn, noon and night, as I had caught glimpses of her dashing waters, the query had naturally suggested itself to my mind—"Surely this is a trout stream?" I repeatedly propounded this pestion to the oldest settlers, every one of them, and only elicited the universal answer of a head shake—"Don't know, looks like it might be."

About the third day of August, 1865, a quiet time came around, business slackened a little, and I realized that for the first time of the season I might venture to take a little leisure. My eyes turned more longingly than ever to the sparkling, dancing waters of Catherine Creek, the voices said come, so invitingly, so compellingly, that resistance was vain, and I announced to partner, my father, that I was "going a-fishing." His reply was, "Bully, my mouth is watering for a mess of trout; go and I will tend shop, and darn the business anyhow."

I had no tackle in the limited equipment that I had brought with me in the spring, and a search of all the stores revealed the fact that there was no tackle in town. It had apparently not as yet dawned upon the settlers in these parts that they were in the heart of a sportsman's paradise.

We had in storage the leavings of a stock of goods from Lewiston brought here the year before, and a search of this old stock brought to light a veritable treasure; a bunch of old-style linen lines and ringed hooks; and this discovery brought about in turn the discovery of the finest trout stream in the writer's experience. I just went at it boy style, cut a willow, caught some grasshoppers, and had more happiness that afternoon than I had ever before experienced in the same length of time.

The catch was sixty-five beauties, all of them, not one in the bunch under 10 inches—and up to 18 inches;—and the discovery was made that Catherine Creek was a trout stream, a discovery which for more than half a century has contributed to the joy and happiness of hundreds and thousands of people. Not a stream in Oregon furnishes more comfortable and beautiful camping places, and for years people for many miles around have availed themselves of the privileges, and spent many happy days and weeks camping on Catherine Creek.

RED CROSS NURSING.

brained" high school girl-volunteer, however patriotic and sincere, stands small chance of being chosen, principally because of her youth.

Women who aspire to reach the front as nurses' aids must pass examinations in the Red Cross courses in First Aid, Hygiene and Home Care of the Sick, Home Dietetics, and Preparation of Surgical Dressings.

The American woman who wishes may lend a hand in other work than nursing. She should immediately get in touch with the local Red Cross chapter in her home town. Here are some of the things she may be called upon to do before the war is over:

Serve in civil hospitals from which nurses have gone to war.
Sewing, mending, linen room work, preparation of surgical supplies, massage, packing, housekeeping, photographer, shipping, cook, waitress, typist, telephone operator.

Corporal Richard Hansen, former Pendleton boy and member of Company M, third Oregon infantry, went to Pendleton Friday from La Grande to conduct recruiting there for several days in behalf of the third regiment. The regiment lacks 70 men of being up to war strength and each captain is designated as a recruiting officer to fill vacancies.

Company M needs six men and the first secured at Pendleton was Victor Hansen, brother of Corporal Hansen. While in Pendleton Corporal Hansen is stopping at the home of his sister, Mrs. C. H. Norris. The recruits are sent first to Clackamas and transportation is provided.

Each recruit may go to Clackamas at once if he desires or he may wait until a squad is secured. The national guard takes only unmarried men and recruits must be between the ages of 18 and 45. Those registered for the draft may enlist in the guard if they wish to do so. The vacancies in the third Oregon are due to the dismissal of married men from the ranks.

The Third Oregon will be mobilized at American lake late in July and there is an impression in the regiment that it will go to France in the early fall. It is one of the most efficient guard regiments in the United States and expects an early call for foreign service.

Alumni Hold Meeting.

Portland, Ore., June 27.—(United Press)—After two busy days, the annual convention of the Alumni Association of the University of Oregon is being brought to a close here this afternoon. The State Medical Association convention will open here tomorrow and many of the former students at the state school, who attended the session the first three days of the week, will also attend the meeting of medics.
