to partake of the Lord's Supper? There has and is now taught by some churches that infants are born with sin upon their little souls and are consequently required to be baptized in order to enter a saved state. I can show a graveyard in Iowa where a little baby is buried on the outside of the cemetery fence (because it had not been sprinkled) while a saloon-keeper, who was a church member (as many of them are) was buried inside in "consecrated ground." Jesus clearly teaches us that "little children" are not sinners, but are innocent and sets them up as examples of what we should be in order to inherit His Kingdom. There is just as much scriptural proof for infant baptism as there is for so-called, "Holy Water," "Blessed Candles" and a lot of other kinds of blessed foolishness that has crept into church use. I accept the confession of historians, that sprinkling as a baptism is an innovation, a man devised and substituted method without the least sanction of scriptural authority. Respectfully, H. L. FORD.

THE FORUM

The Greek Word Baptize.

La Grande, June 29.—(To the Editor)—In Friday's issue of June 22 I notice the second attempt of Rev. Upton H. Gibbs to refute my statement in my published sermon in which I claimed that the Greek word from which the English word baptize is derived never can be consistently rendered "sprinkle." Mr. Gibbs labors hard to defend his church practice of affusion but ignores the most important facts determining the question at issue. In my late reply to him I gave him proof from his own and ablest authorities that the original mode of baptism was an immersion of the whole person in the water; furthermore that this specific action was necessary to meet the antecedent requisites for baptism. In giving these quotations I did not use any authorities who belong to the Baptist order, so I cannot be accused of being biased. Now it ought to impress the honest seeker after truth that when I can call into court testimony in my favor from the best in the ranks of my opponent that my claims are undoubtedly sustained. If on the other hand the word baptizo meant or could be rendered sprinkle why did not the scholars just say so? How is it that not one real standard Greek lexicon gives what Mr. Gibbs claims is one of its meanings that is sprinkle. Now if Mr. Gibbs can produce such a lexicon that gives sprinkle as a derivative of baptizo I will pay $50 to the "Red Cross" society. This offer is extended to any clergyman of La Grande and I will publicly retract my utterance on that question. I will further affirm that the word from which our translators have derived. Burial is not "Generic" as my friend would have you believe but on the other hand is specific. Rantidzo, means sprinkle. Those who are interested in this investigation might ask the question why did the translators of the sacred writings (when they came to the word baptizo) anglicize it instead of giving us its English equivalent?

Does it not appear reasonable that those noted churchmen who practice sprinkling would be happy to seize on to a secondary meaning to favor their practice if it could be done without lowering their standards as reputable scholars?

I will now briefly examine Mark 7:4 which is relied upon to prove sprinkling as one of the modes of baptism. Vatabulus Professor of Hebrew in Paris says of Mark 7:4, "They wash themselves all over." Grohns, the great German writer, says, "they cleansed themselves more carefully from defilement contracted at the market, to wit: not only by washing of hands, but by immersing the body." Then as to the washing of beds—I would inform Mr. Gibbs that often such beds were nothing more than a quilt or cloth that could be easily immersed. Again modern textual critics have, with striking oneness of sentiment, decided that Kilnon, the word for "tables or couches" is an interpolation. We are told that because Households were baptized in New Testament times that infants must be included or that it is justifiable to conclude that such was the case. The burden of proof is upon Mr. Gibbs if he can prove that all households contain infants then his logic will have weight but not otherwise. Suppose I said I baptized the household of Rev. Gibbs would it be safe to conclude that I baptized an infant? Not unless a figurative use of the term used.

Now on the question of infant baptism I would again impress the fact on the minds of all who read this discussion that I find no proof from reliable history that any infant was baptized during the first and second centuries. But I do find that it crept into the church as a result of the "Pelagian heresy and also admitted
