ties of a commander I already have spoken. Those of a statesman are the same. I remember the time when America produced a statesman. No one suspected him of being a great man. He was regarded as an uncounted backwoodsman, with a sense of humor and a fund of good stories. By what seemed the chance of an election in which there were party divisions, the man from Illinois was elected. He had one quality, not too common among politicians—the single eye. By the time his work was done America knew she had had a great statesman. I believe that if America is true to herself that kind of recognition may yet be repeated.

AMERICA'S BOARD OF WAR DIRECTORS

ANNA HOWARD SHAW
Although more than seventy years old—she was born February 14th, 1847, to be exact—when it came time to find someone who could organize the entire womanhood of the nation to do its part in the war, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, ordained minister, honorary president of the National Woman Suffrage Association, and defender and upbuilder of all woman-kind, was chosen.

She has given up everything to serve the government in mobilizing the women for the nation's defense. Already she has formed Women's Service Leagues in every state in the union. And, now that President Wilson, through Herbert C. Hoover, has called upon the women of the nation to help save and eliminate waste, they are ready, thanks to the efficient organization built up by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw.

ever, he managed to get back to his drug store and he decided to investigate his foot. On removing his shoe he found located in the toe thereof an able bodied hornet that had been stinging his foot almost every time he took a step. How the "animal" got into his shoe Mr. Tallman does not know but he knows what it means to receive a submarine attack from such an unseen foe.

BATTLEFIELD JUNK RECLAIMED

BY WILLIAM PHILLIP SIMMS
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
With the British Armies in the Field, July 5.—(By mail)—Did you ever stop to think what becomes of all the worn-out equipment of an army composed of millions of men?

At the outset of the present war much of this was pure loss. Now in the British army there is an "old clothes man" and the profits he reports back to his boss, John Bull, might make Morgan, Rockefeller or Carnegie envious.

The old clothes man "saves the scraps." He makes new things out of old. He cleans up the battlefields and camps and very little is wasted nowadays. His job is to collect everything from a horseshoe nail to a discarded sige-gun and put it back into commission.

Brass objects which have lost their usefulness are melted into ingots, cast-iron junk becomes pig-iron again; bronze, tin, steel, nickel and everything of the kind which has irretrievably lost its shape is put into melting pots to be born again in another guise keeping up an eternal transmigration but serving all the while.

I recently visited one of these scrap-saving repair shops. About 12,000 people are employed, mostly French women and girls.

Here great howitzers are repaired and government chronometers have their hair-springs readjusted; tents are patched and mended and covers are made for steel helmets; artillery wheels are repaired and micrometers put true again. There is a wood-working shop, a foundry for running brass, bronze, zinc, tin and iron; a boot repair department, a great machine shop; a gas mask repair department and many others.

In one room there were hundreds and hundreds of rifles.

"This is one day's arrivals," the commanding officer explained. "By tonight the room should be cleared to make room for tomorrow's arrivals."

Many of the rifles were muddy and rusty as though picked out of the mud on the battlefield. Women were cleaning these. In one corner a soldier was rhythmically swinging the rifles up, one by one to a rest and squinting through the barrels at a light to see if they were bent or if the rifling was damaged. The officer explained this was obviously the first bit of inspection because it would be a waste of time to repair other parts of the rifle if the barrel was damaged.

These rifles pass on down the line. When they reach the end they are as good as new and after being oiled are packed in boxes and shipped back to the front.

I. W. W. AGENT ARRESTED.

Fred Miller Held at Enterprise, Pending Investigation.

Enterprise, Ore., July 24.—(Special)—Fred Miller, unaturalized German and I. W. W. operator, who has been under surveillance of the sheriff's office for the past week, was arrested Friday by the new city marshal. He was taken before the district attorney and turned loose, but later was put to work by the sheriff's force so they could keep track of him. Sheriff Rinehart yesterday received word from United States District Attorney Reames to re-arrest Miller and detain him for investigation. Miller has been in this country seven years, but never applied for naturalization. He registered for conscription at Baker. He has I. W. W. literature and application blanks and has been soliciting members here.

Picked Up By The Stroller

I see where a girl values her pretty ankle at $10,000. Figure what the free show is worth in La Grande every day: 2 ankles $20,000, 100 sets at $20,000 per set would be $2,000,000; say the feminine population is 2200, the total inventory would be $44,000,000.

A man has been discovered in Kansas who admits he lied to a reporter instead of the reporter lying about him. Ringling Bros. are after him.

The question is how many ice cream cones, sundaes and sodas can a "flapper" consume.

The suffragets busted into jail and now they won't get out. Their motto is, "what the President wants done, don't do it."

"I suffer in silence," is a favorite remark of some people, which is just exactly the way they don't suffer.

I saw a bunch sitting in a cool spot on Adams avenue yesterday. Nothing short of dynamite couldn't have budged them. There was no pep in the whole crowd.

They tell this story on Joe Tallman, president of the Pendleton Commercial Club:

While out with a party judging the boys' gardening work last week Tallman suddenly had a strange feeling. "Something shot up my leg and I thought it was a stroke," he told a friend in explaining the matter. He hobbled over to the auto and sat down, pondering over his physical condition. He soon became convinced that he had something but he did not know just what. Sharp pains ran up one leg and he had visions of gout and various other forms of grief. How-

SOME THINGS FOR AMERICA TO CONSIDER

BY SPENCER WILKINSON.
(Professor of Military History, Oxford University.)
(Written for the United Press)
ARTICLE THREE.

London, July 7.—(By Mail)—In war the infantry soldier is a day laborer and a beast of burden. From the English Channel to Verdun there is at this moment a belt of country a mile or two wide which is seamed and scarred with endless white lines, which, when you come close to them, proved to be rows of irregular, deep trenches, their sides supported by woodwork or wickerwork and, here and there pierced by shafts running deep down into the earth to underground chambers, where the troops are guarded from shells during the bombardment which precedes the attack. All this earth has been turned by the infantry soldier. When you see him marching he is carrying on his body everything that is indispensable, his kit, his food, his rifle and cartridges, his steel helmet, his gas mask. He is one a thousand moving for hours along a dusty or a muddy road. There is a man just in front of him, another just behind him and one on either side. His normal day is to march or dig. It is a weary monotony from which the excitement of a fight is an occasional relief. In a good army very thorough arrangements are made to cause the march to be as little irksome as possible to the men in the ranks. Nothing would contribute more to the health and happiness of the American citizens who are going to fight for the cause than a thorough study of the modern arrangements for the march of an army corps. The inventor of the whole system as now practiced was the French General, Lewal, whose volume, Tactique de Marche, is the basis of the modern marching arrangements of the French army, by which the troops cover a longer distance with less fatigue than those of any other army in the world. I should not like to let you go without touching on a larger aspect of the war. The struggle now under way has had no parallel for many centuries. The changes in the machinery of war though they have been enormous are really but a trifle. In the art of generalship, there are no changes. But this is a conflict concerning the spirit in which humanity is in future to govern itself or be governed. The Prussians aspire to deal with Europe as Philip and Alexander of Macedon dealt with Greece. Their object is to be at the head of Europe and then of the world. The conflict resembles also that between Carthage and Rome. The Romans were successful and for many centuries the civilized world spoke the Latin tongue and was regulated by Roman law. Out of that Roman world grew the world we know. Germany means to repeat the exploits of the Romans and make a German world. If Germany succeeds in mastering Europe her mastery of America is only a question of time. That is why many of us think there can be no compromise and why we think the victory of the Allies is as needful for America as for Europe. In war, time is everything and the character of a modern war, of a war for a cause that affects all the world, is that there is no limit to the liabilities to be incurred. It is a national affair. The whole nation must take part. Short of that it is folly to look for victory. If America is to fight with her might she needs a great statesman to guide her and a great commander for her army and her navy. Of the quali-
