FRENCH LONG FOR PEACE BUT WILL FIGHT FOR IT

BY W. S. FORREST (United Press Staff Correspondent)

Paris, July 31.—It is no secret in France today that three years of terrible war have produced an earnest desire for peace.

Sentiment towards peace permeates the big government buildings in Paris; the cities and smallest villages. Almost every French home, aristocratic or humble, rich or poor, in city or country has its individual story of war sacrifice. Crepe is as common as calico or silk. Naturally this element alone has produced a longing for peace. But as the composite voice of the highest officials of France has said:

"The only peace wanted in this land is a French peace—integral restitution of Alsace-Lorraine, brutally torn from France in 1871, reparation for damages of war, guarantees for the future. France will fight until she gets that peace."

For the first time during the war the French parliament, with the exception of three or four recalcitrant Socialist deputies, is today a solidified unit on all the war aims of the nation. Premier Alexander Ribot, facing the first political storm of his regime when the Chamber of Deputies reconvened after the Easter holidays took the firm action which consolidated the nation.

He modified the high military command placing the national hero, General Petain in supreme charge of French forces on the Western front.

"We all want peace," he said. "But what we want and are going to have is a French peace."

The world has heard much of the famous "bas de laine" the woolen stocking bank of France. It is the little hoard of gold to be found always in French homes. The strain on it has been heavy. But today this woolen sock continues to pour from $800,000 to $2,000,000 each week into the bank of France. This yellow stream is exchanged for the government's short term bonds bearing from four to five per cent of interest.

Also the circulation of French banknotes—like American paper money—has risen today from $1,200,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. This represents the nation's floating debt except its outstanding short term bonds and enables France to live and carry on the war from one great loan to another. The war to date has taxed the finance of France about eighteen billions of dollars.

The seemingly bottomless "bas de laine" made France's first war loan successful, and at a time when military events were far from promising. The second duplicated the first. Then came the famous French "Loan of Victory" and its $3,000,000,000 more from the woolen sock. For the first time also during this past year, French banks have found that deposits have begun to overbalance withdrawals of private accounts.

France can allow her national debt to mount to twenty billion dollars and then use less than one-third of the country's annual savings to carry it. Two years of war elapsed before the government began to balance accounts. Increased taxation, including three cent postage instead of two; doubled telephone and telegraph rates;

Probably the only serious economic worry in France during the war has been the coal shortage of the winter of 1916-17. The great railroad transportation problem occasioned by the Battle of the Somme during the summer of 1916 and the autumn flooding of the Seine left the country without its supply of winter coal except for vital industries. The French public has just been told in the Chamber of Deputies that the coal situation will be ameliorated the coming winter. A specialist has been appointed by the government to handle this problem alone. One of his early acts is expected to be coal cards, giving all an equal supply.

The strikes of working girls during May in Paris and other French cities acted as highest tributes to the economic situation. The demands were light, demonstrations were of the tamest character and employers needed but little government coercion to reestablish their workers at wages which, even yet, cannot compare with the average wage of the girl worker in the United States. Otherwise there have been no economic upheavals in France.

The French navy, of which little has been heard during the war, except its misfortunes, has played a great part in the anti-submarine campaign. It has silently provisioned French, British, Russian and Serbian troops in the Near East; transported hundreds of thousands of men and enormous quantities of food from French colonies and helped to keep up the tireless watch by Allied vessels on Austria's hidden fleet in the Adriatic.

Oil Magnate Suicide

Oakland, Aug. 1.—(Special)—D. G. Schaffield, a former president of the Standard Oil Company of California, committed suicide here Monday. His son-in-law, C. O. Flint, found Schaffield's body following the report of a revolver. The aged financier was found lying on the floor with a bullet hole in his temple.

THE RECRUIT

By Andrew R. Marker "Save me to die when life is high— The sudden shell, the quick release.

At the battle front, in harness,—not The slow decay of squalid peace.

"No finer end I think than this! I would not shirk the pain of strife

Nor lose the soldier's sudden death For sluggard years of coward life.

"My breath—God's gracious gift— Exalting waits His high behest. My heart, which moves at His command,

At His command will gladly rest.

"I would not tarry when He calls To haggie at the heavy toll; And to Him render, grudgingly, The insult of a slacker's soul!
