The Forest Ranger in "The Eyes of the World."

World" at the Arcade theatre on Sunday will take on special authority by reason of the fact that Harold Bell Wright, the author of the book which has broken all records as "best sellers," with a sale of over a million copies, had an active personal hand in the work of interpreting his characters for the screen.

"The Eyes of the World" is a story of California. For the film production the author has added a prologue which goes back to Boston a generation before the opening scenes of the book and shows the origin of his character. This is said to greatly increase interest in the people of the story.

Readers of the book will recall many scenes in the mountains that caught to provide great material for a thrilling and scenic photoplay. There is, for instance, the furious hand-to-hand combat of Rutledge and King, the rival lovers, on the precipitous cliff. As in the book, this is the major climax of the film production, and great things are promised in the way of thrills when this is shown on the screen.

The search of the forest rangers for the missing mountain girl who has been kidnaped, is another feature of the romance from which much may be expected in the picture version.

"A SELF MADE WIDOW" COMING TO THE ARCADE

When Henry Albert Phillips penned the story upon which "A Self-Made Widow" is based he wrote one of the most fascinatingly original dramas imaginable. Imagine an unsophisticated young country girl—who owns a farm and is sought by the young men of her village in marriage—falling for the honeyed words of a handsome man from New York who tells her that he is a millionaire and wants her to elope with him. Imagine her telling the aged spinster cousin with whom she lives that everything will be all right and that she will soon send for her cousin to visit her in her palatial New York mansion. And then imagine this girl Sylvia Smith, really eloping with the man and finally finding, upon landing in New York, that he is already married and has several children! That is the situation that the heroine—enacted by Alice Brady—in "A Self-Made Widow" is up against. As Sylvia is a spunky girl she doesn't admit defeat and hurry back to her old home. Instead of doing that she takes a tight grip on her courage and looks around for a way out. A strange way finally presents itself. She finds on the docks the coat and hat of a man who has apparently committed suicide, for in the coat is a letter bearing this inscription: "In case of my death the finder will kindly send this letter to my attorney." Sylvia decides to claim that she is this man's widow. This she does and as the result she meets with the most startling and fascinating sort of adventures. This new World-Picture Brady-Made is a hummer. Every film fan will enjoy it because it moves swiftly, it is full of surprises and sudden turns and because Alice Brady is the star. See "A Self-Made Widow" at the Arcade theatre on Wednesday and Thursday.
