ment of a department store, is supplemented by board and room for her services in looking after the small children of her landlady, Mrs. Cadogan, in the evenings.

Always in the back of Annie's mind is the idea that some day a kind rich lady will adopt her and leave her lots of money. Annie's dream comes true. She is adopted "for spite" by a rich old woman who hates her relatives but Annie's sweet disposition disarms the old lady's bitterness and Annie marries the grandson of her benefactress, realizing both wealth and happiness.

The play is one of the best that was ever provided for Miss Minter. In it "Lovely Mary" is at her very prettiest and most captivating. The new production is certain of wide popularity.
